

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

VALUABLE LAW WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

STEVENS AND SONS,

LIMITED,

119 & 120, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

The Annual Practice, 1898.—Edited by THOMAS SNOW,

Barrister-at-Law · CHARLES BURNETT, & Master of the Supreme Court; and

F. A. STRI

"A book which ev

Robbins' Tr

Hypothecat
risters-at-L
1897. Price

Greenwood's showing the citors' Office

Ninth Edit
Law. Royal

"We should like most useful practice

Pollock's I

Obligations
SIR FREDI Contract,"

Odgers' Pri

Civil Actio:
ODGERS, J
Demy 8vo.

"The student or of pleading cannot d

Warburton's

Law.—With (Founded o

"The cases have b
the student or the p

Marsden's

Fourth Edi
1897. Price

"Clear in statemen

Palmer's C

Companies

PART I.: COME

Underwriting, Memoranda and Articles of Association, Private Companies, Employes' Benefits, Resolutions, Notices, Certificates, Powers of Attorney, Debentures and Debenture Stock, Banking and Advance Securities, Petitions, Writs, Pleadings, Judgments and Orders, Reconstruction, Amalgamation, Special Acts. With Copious Notes and an Appendix containing the Acts and Rules. Sixth Edition. By FRANCIS BEAUFORT PALMER, assisted by CHARLES MACNAGHTEN and ARTHUR JOHN CHITTY, Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1895. Price 36s. cloth.

PART II.: WINDING-UP FORMS AND PRACTICE. Arranged as follows:—Compulsory Winding-Up, Voluntary Winding-Up, Winding-Up under Supervision, Arrangements and Compromises. With a Chapter on Debentures, and Copious Notes, and an Appendix containing Acts and Rules. Seventh Edit. By FRANCIS BEAUFORT PALMER, assisted by FRANK EVANS, Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1897. Price 32s. cloth.

Prideaux's Precedents in Conveyancing.—With Dissertations on its Law and Practice. Sixteenth Edition. By JOHN WHITCOMBE and BETHUNE HORSBRUGH, Barristers-at-Law. Two Vols. Royal 8vo. 1895. Price 3l. 10s. cloth.

"Accurate, concise, clear, and comprehensive in scope, and we know of no treatise upon Conveyancing which is so generally useful to the practitioner"—Law Times.

* * * A Catalogue of New Law Works post free on application.

Given by Title Insurance and Trust Company Foundation

, and V, Bar-
yal 8vo.

cing,
in Soli-icing.—
ster-ate of the es of

m. By iples of re in BLAKE

ander."

n system

ninal
st-Law.
cloth.
ly repay

92.—
my 8vo.

al.

on to ements,

Chitty's Statutes. New Edition.—The Statutes of Practical Utility, from the Earliest Times to 1894, inclusive. Arranged in Alphabetical and Chronological Order; with Notes and Indexes. Fifth Edition. By J. M. LELY, Barrister-at-Law. 13 Vols. Royal 8vo. 1894-5. Price £13. 18s. cloth.

*. ANNUAL SUPPLEMENTS for 1895, cloth, 5s.; 1896, cloth, 10s. 1897 (Nearly ready).

Rogers on Registration: Parliamentary, Municipal, and Local Government, including the Practice in Registration Appeals, with Appendices of Statutes, Orders in Council, and Forms. Sixteenth Edition. By MAURICE POWELL, Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1897. Price 21s. cloth.

"The practitioner will find within these covers everything which he can be expected to know, well arranged, and carefully stated."—Law Times.

Johnson's Bills of Costs in the High Court of Justice and Court of Appeal, in the House of Lords and the Privy Council; with the Scales of Costs and Tables of Fees in use in the Houses of Lords and Commons, relative to Private Bills; Election Petitions, Parliamentary and Municipal. Inquiries and Arbitrations under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and other Arbitrations; Proceedings in the Court of the Railway and Canal Commission; in the County Court and the Mayor's Courts. The Scale of Costs and Tables of Fees in use in the Court of Passage, Liverpool; and Conveyancing Costs. With Orders and Rules as to Costs and Court Fees, and Notes and Decisions relating thereto. By HORACE MAXWELL JOHNSON, Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1897. (940 pages). Price 32s. cloth.

Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleadings.—With Notes and Rules relating to Pleading. Fifth Edition. Revised and adapted to the Present Practice in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. By THOMAS J. BULLEN, Barrister-at-Law, CYRIL DODD, Q.C., and C. W. CLIFFORD, Barrister-at-Law. In one volume. Demy 8vo. 1897. Price 17. 18s. cloth.

Edmunds on Patents.—The Law and Practice of Letters

Patent for Inventions. By LEWIS EDMUNDS, Q.C. Second Edition. By T. M. STEVENS, Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. (1,002 pages). 1897. Price 17. 12s. cloth.

Gordon's Monopolies by Patents, and the Statutable

Remedies available to the Public. By J. W. GORDON, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. Price 18s. cloth.

Bonner's Law of Motor Cars, Hackney and other Carriages.—An Epitome of the Law, Statutes, and Regulations. By G. A. BONNER, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. Price 7s. 6d. cloth.

"The book is full of useful information."—Law Times, May 29, 1897.

Hunt's London Local Government.—The Law relating to the London County Council, the Vestries and District Boards elected under the Metropolis Management Acts, and other Local Authorities. By JOHN HUNT, Barrister-at-Law. Two Vols. Royal 8vo. 1897. Price 37. 3s. cloth.

Freeth's Acts relating to the new Death Duty, called the Estate Duty. With an Introduction dealing with the other Death Duties, a Digest, copious Notes, and an Appendix, containing the Estate Duty Forms and the Rules regulating Proceedings in England and Ireland in Appeals under the Acts. Second Edition. Thoroughly Revised and Enlarged. By E. FREETH, Deputy-Controller of Legacy and Succession Duties. Demy 8vo. 1897. Price 12s. 6d. cloth.

"The official position of the author renders his opinion on questions of procedure of great value."—Solicitors' Journal.

Macassey and Strahan's Law relating to Civil Engineers,

Architects, and Contractors.—With a Chapter on Arbitrations. Second Edition. By L. LIVINGSTON MACASSEY and J. A. STRAHAN, Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. Price 12s. 6d. cloth.

Dicey's Conflict of Laws.—A Digest of the Law of England with reference to the Conflict of Laws. By A. V. DICEY, Q.C., B.C.L. With Notes of American Cases, by Professor MOORE. Royal 8vo. 1896. Price 30s. cloth.

Shirley's Leading Cases in the Common Law.—A Selection of Leading Cases in the Common Law, with Notes. Fifth Edition. By RICHARD WATSON, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1896. Price 16s. cloth.

Harris' Hints on Adversary Conduct of Cases Civil and Criminal. Classes of Cases suggested for study, and the manner of dealing with them, &c., &c. By RICHARD HARRIS, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. Price 10s. 6d. cloth.

"A very complete Manual of the Advocate's art in Trial by Jury."—Solicitors' Journal.

*. A large stock of Second-hand Law Reports and Text-books on Sale.

~~12/6~~

~~9~~

7/6

A

DL
ASW
Y/g2

GENERAL VIEW

OF THE

LAW OF PROPERTY.

BY

J. ANDREW STRAHAN, M.A., LL.B.,

OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE AND MIDLAND CIRCUIT, BARRISTER-AT-LAW,

Regius Professor of English Law, Queen's College, Belfast; Senior Scholar in the Law of Property, Middle Temple, 1881; Joint Author of Fisher and Strahan's "Law of the Press," and Macassey and Strahan's "Law relating to Civil Engineers and Architects."

ASSISTED BY

J. SINCLAIR BAXTER, B.A., LL.B. (Lond.),

OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE AND NORTH-EAST CIRCUIT (IRELAND), BARRISTER-AT-LAW, Holder of Studentship and Prizeman in Constitutional Law, Council of Legal Education, 1894; Senior Scholar in the Law of Property, Middle Temple, 1892; and John Brooke Scholar, King's Inns, Dublin, 1895.

SECOND EDITION.

LONDON:

STEVENS AND SONS, LIMITED,

119 & 120, CHANCERY LANE,

Law Publishers.

1897

LONDON :

PRINTED BY C. F. ROWOETH, GREAT NEW STREET, FETTER LANE—E.C.

TO

R. A. MCCALL, Esq., LL.D.,

ONE OF HER MAJESTY'S COUNSEL,

AND A MASTER OF THE BENCH OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE,

This Little Book

IS DEDICATED

AS

A MARK OF THE AUTHOR'S

FRIENDSHIP AND ESTEEM.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

IN preparing this edition the Author, while altering some details and stating a little more fully those things which, in the language of Lord Coke, "though they seem ancient are yet necessary to be known," has in no way departed from the general plan of the first edition of this work.

While fully admitting that for purposes of exhaustive study it will be necessary, or at least convenient, for some time to come, to deal separately with the law of realty and the law of personalty, the Author is still of opinion that the time has arrived when, for institutional treatment, both branches of the law of property are best considered together. When what may be called the classic works on the subject were written, the circumstances were entirely different. The law as to personalty was then much as it is now; but the law as to realty was a system based on radically different principles. Fines and recoveries, the doctrine of seisin, and a peculiar law of wills, controlled the creation, transfer, and devolution of freehold interests in land, but had no bearing on goods or choses in action. All these have now, for every practical purpose, been either abolished or superseded. The law of personalty has been eating up the law of realty. The Land Transfer Act of the present year is the latest example of this process. Realty henceforth will, on its owner's death, vest in his executors or administrators precisely as if it were personalty, and should the machinery of the Act be made compulsory, or be generally adopted, interests in and mortgages of land will be transferred almost in the same manner as shares and debentures. Surely, then, the mode of dealing with the law of property which was wisely adopted by the classical writers of old, need not necessarily be the best method at the present day.

In referring to the Land Transfer Act, 1897, the Author may be permitted to enter his protest against the restriction of the application of Part I. of that Act to England, which sect. 2 of the Act of 1876 seems to impose. By this restriction a wanton and entirely useless difference is made in the law of executors and administrators as obtaining in England and Ireland (hitherto practically identical), which there is little doubt will cause confusion and uncertainty in the administration of the estates of persons dying possessed of land in both countries. Part I. of the Act has no necessary connection with registration of title, and would properly form the subject-matter of a separate statute extending to both countries. The motive for its restriction to England is rendered the more inscrutable by the fact that the rule now introduced in England had previously been admitted to a certain extent in Ireland by the Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Act, 1891.

The Author wishes to express his thanks to many gentlemen, including his reviewers in the legal press, for much useful criticism and advice. He trusts that he has thus been enabled to send out this Second Edition with, at any rate, fewer mistakes and omissions than marked the First. His especial thanks are due to Mr. Arthur Underhill, of Lincoln's Inn (Reader in the Law of Property to the Council of Legal Education), Mr. J. M. Gover and Mr. H. Drysdale Woodcock, of the Middle Temple, and Mr. Sinclair Baxter, of the Irish Bar. Besides the great assistance rendered originally by the last-mentioned gentleman in preparing for publication the course of Lectures on which this Work is founded, he is in the present Edition solely responsible for the treatment of those most intricate and difficult statutes, the Irish Land Acts, and he has also given the Author much help in preparing the Table of Abbreviations and seeing the Book through the Press.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

IN the following pages the author has attempted to state clearly and very concisely the main principles of the Law of Property.

Hitherto, most writers, in dealing with this subject, have treated separately of realty and personalty. The author has ventured to depart from this practice. Recent legislation has, it seems to him, so greatly approximated the law of realty to the law of personalty, that they may now be profitably considered together. The principles of both are to a large extent the same: where they differ, he believes that by contrasting them they may be made to illustrate each other.

Considerable experience as a law tutor has shown him that the prime object of a first book for students should be not so much to teach the reader the law as to enable him to learn it for himself. To accomplish this, the subject-matter must be arranged logically and systematically, and the general principles underlying its many details brought clearly and conspicuously out. This he has endeavoured to the best of his ability to do. He is quite aware of the dangers of attempting to arrange logically a body of law which, if it ever was so, has long ceased to be systematic, and to generalise where every general principle has been limited and restricted by special custom, judicial decision, or legislative enactment. He cannot hope to have done this without being guilty of some oversights, and having perpetrated some blunders. He trusts, however, that the difficulty of the task will induce his readers to look on these with a merciful eye.

Before concluding, he must take the opportunity to thank his friend and former pupil, Mr. J. Sinclair Baxter, LL.B., for help extending over the greater part of the Work, and more especially as to Appendices A. to D., and his friend Mr. J. M. Newnham, LL.B., Solicitor of the Supreme Court, for the forms and notes to them in Appendix E.

1, FLOWDEN BUILDINGS, TEMPLE,
17th September, 1895.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION	v
PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION	vii
TABLE OF CASES	xv
TABLE OF STATUTES	xix
TABLE OF ABBREVIATIONS	xxv

PT. I.—OWNERSHIP AND THINGS OWNED.

Meanings of Property	1
Right of Ownership	2
Things Ownable	2
Divisions of Things Owned	5
Technical Divisions	5
Natural Divisions	9
Absolute Ownership, Characteristics :—
Indefinite in User	10
Unrestricted in Disposition	11
Unlimited in Duration	11
Partial Ownership	11
Interests in Things Owned	13
Arrangement of Work	13

PT. II.—KINDS OF INTERESTS IN THINGS OWNED.

Ownership of Land and Goods	15
Tenure of Land	16
Estates in Land	17
Title Deeds and Heirlooms	17

	PAGE
SECT. I.—INTERESTS IN LAND	18
Sub-sect. (1).— Freehold Interests	26
(a.) Estates in Fee Simple	29
(b.) Estates in Fee Tail	37
(c.) Estates for Life	45
A. Settlements of Freeholds	55
Sub-sect. (2).— Chattel Interests	65
(a.) Tenancy for Time Certain	68
(b.) Tenancy at Will	78
(c.) Tenancy by Sufferance	79
B. Settlements of Chattel Interests	80
SECT. II.—INTERESTS IN GOODS	82
(a.) At Law	82
(b.) In Equity	83
C. Settlements of Goods	87

PT. III.—MODES OF HOLDING INTERESTS.

Modes of Holding Interests	90
SECT. I.—IN TRUST OWNERSHIP	91
SECT. II.—IN CONCURRENT OWNERSHIP	101
Sub-sect. (1).— Joint Tenancy	103
(2).— Coparcenary	112
(3).— Tenancy in Common	115
(4).— Tenancy by Entireties	116
SECT. III.—IN FUTURE OWNERSHIP	118
Sub-sect. (1).— Future Ownership at Common Law	118
(2).— Future Ownership in Equity	135
(3).— Future Ownership by Statute	139
(4).— Powers	146
(5).— Perpetuities and Accumulations	154
SECT. IV.—IN CONDITIONAL OWNERSHIP	159
Sub-sect. (1).— Mortgages of Land	169
Part A.—Mortgages by Deed	170
B.—Mortgages by Deposit	184
Sub-sect. (2).— Mortgages of Goods	187

PT. IV.—MODES OF ACQUIRING INTERESTS.

	PAGE
Title	191
SECT. I.—TITLE BY ORIGINAL ACQUISITION OF OWNERSHIP	192
SECT. II.—TITLE BY TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP	194
Sub-sect. (1).— Transfer by Act of Owner ..	195
Part A.—Alienation inter vivos	196
I.—Alienation of Land	199
II.—Alienation of Goods	215
Part B.—Alienations mortis causd	223
I.— Donationes mortis causd	224
II.—Alienation by Will	225
Sub-sect. (2).— Transfer by Operation of Law ..	249
Part A.—Devolution inter vivos	249
Part B.—Devolution mortis causd	259

PT. V.—RIGHTS OVER THINGS OWNED BY OTHERS.

Corporeal and Incorporeal Property	274
SECT. I.—RIGHTS OVER LAND OWNED BY OTHERS ..	275
Rights to Definite Use	276
Rights of Support	277
Rights of Way	277
Rights to Water	277
Rights to Light and Air	277
Rights to Share Profits	280
Seignories	280
Profits à prendre	280
Franchises	283
Rents and Annuities charged on Land ..	283
Tithes	284
Rights, Offices, &c. connected with Land ..	285
Advowsons	286
Ancient Offices	287
Titles of Honour	288
SECT. II.—RIGHTS OVER GOODS OWNED BY OTHERS ..	288
Trover	289
Bailment	289
Lien	291

PT. VI.—PROPRIETARY RIGHTS NOT OVER THINGS.

	PAGE
Proprietary Rights not over Things	293
Choses in Action	294
Annuities not charged on Land	300
Personal Annuities	300
Consolidated Bank Annuities	301
Interests in Corporations	302
Shares	304
Stock	307
Debentures	308
Monopolies	309
Patents	310
Copyright	312
Right to Perform	314
Trade Marks	315
Trade Names	315

PT. VII.—PERSONS UNDER DISABILITIES AS TO PROPERTY.

Disabilities and Persons	317
SECT. I.—NATURAL PERSONS	318
Specific Disabilities	319
General Disabilities	321
SECT. II.—ARTIFICIAL PERSONS	330
Corporations	330
Charities	332

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xiii

APPENDICES.

	PAGE
A.—COPYHOLDS	337
B.—IRISH LAND ACTS	343
C.—REGISTRATION OF DEEDS AND TITLE (IRELAND) ..	352
D.—SHIPS	356
E.—FORMS (DEEDS OF GRANT AND MORTGAGE, WILL)..	359
F.—TABLE OF LIMITATIONS	367

INDEX	369
---------------	-----

TABLE OF CASES.

	PAGE		PAGE
Abbas v. Burney.....	134	Brachen, In re , Doughty v. Townson	247
Abbott, In re , Peacock v. Frigont	156	Bradford, Mayor of v. Pickles	4, 277
Abbott v. Middleton	237	Bridger, In re	334
Abbott & Co. v. Wolsey.....	220	Brooke v. Kavanagh	50
Adams v. Dunseath..346, 348,	356	Bruce, In re , Welch v. Colt ..	153
Agra Bank v. Barry	186	Burgess v. Wheate.....91,	100
Allen v. Allen	49	Burnaby v. Equitable Reversion Interest Society	109
Ames, In re	62	Burnett v. Lynch	209
Anderson v. Anderson	236	Buxton v. James.....	313
Anderson v. Pignet.....	70	Byrne's Settlement, In re	147
Angus v. Dalton	279
Anstie, In the goods of	233	Cadell v. Palmer	156
Armory v. Delamirie255,	291	Cain v. Moon	224
Astley v. Micklethwait	138	Calvin's Case	328
Att.-Gen. v. Fletcher	111	Calye's Case.....	291
		Cardross's Settlement, In re ..	323
Backhouse v. Bonomi.....	277	Carter v. Wake	188
Baker v. Ambrose	189	Carter and Kenderdine's Contract, In re	254
Baker v. Sebright	52	Cartwright, In re52,	75
Banks v. Small	40	Casborne v. Scarfe	172
Baring, In re , Jeune v. Baring	81	Castlemaine, Lord v. Lord
Barnes v. Dowling	52	Craven	50
Barrow v. Isaacs	74	Cator v. Cooley	183
Bas v. Gregory	279	Chandler v. Bradley	63
Baynes & Co. v. Lloyd & Sons	209	Charter v. Charter	238
Beardman v. Wilson	211	Chawner's Settled Estates, In re	63
Beavan v. McDonnell.....	327	Cholmley's Case	121
Bell v. Holtby	41	Cholmondeley v. Clinton	170
Blades v. Higgs	4	Christie v. Gosling	138
Bodger v. Bodger	185	Christ's Hospital v. Grainger .	156
Bogue v. Houlston	313	Chute v. Busted.....	34
Bolton v. School Board for London	359	Clayton and Barclay's Contract, In re	329
Borthwick v. Evening Post ..	315	Clitheroe, In re	58
Bovill v. Endle	180	Cochrane v. Cochrane	159
Bowen, In re , Lloyd Phillips v. Davis.....	156	Cochrane v. Moore	217
Bowen-Barff Patent, In re ...	312	Coggs v. Barnard	290
Boyd v. Boyd	270
Boyle v. Richardson	347
Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough.....	182

	PAGE		PAGE
Cohen v. Mitchell.....	299, 329	Fitzgerald's Trustee v. Mel-
Coleridge, In re Lord.....	64	lerah	185
Compton v. Bloxham	238	Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald	283
Cook's Mortgage, In re	111	Fitzsimons v. Olive	346
Coupé Company v. Maddick..	290	Fletcher v. Ashburner	89
Courtier, In re , Coles v. Cour-		Flood, In re	353
tier.....	81	Freeman v. Pope	196
Coxen v. Rowland	162	Freke v. Lord Carbery ..	158, 234
Cundy v. Lindsay	217	Fury v. Smith	352
Curneen v. Tottenham	348
		Gainly v. Ledwidge.....	216
Dale v. Hall.....	291	Garland v. Mead	341
Damerell v. Protheroe	340	Garnett, In the goods of	232
Danson, In re , Bell v. Danson..	159	Garth v. Cotton	52
Dashwood v. Magniac	52	Gilbert, In the goods of	237
Davies v. Davies	75	Giles v. Warren	236
Dean v. Dean	143, 146	Gillman v. Murphy	345
Delacherois v. Delacherois...	32	Gough v. Wood	171
De Lusi's Trusts, Re	152	Government Stock, &c. Invest-
Dick v. Yates	314	ment Co. v. Manila Railway
Dillon v. Dillon	49	Co.....	308
Doe v. Davis.....	170	Grant v. Ellis	257
Doe d. Freestone v. Parratt ..	117	Greaves v. Tofield	284
Doe v. Hellier	340	Greene v. Kirkwood	163
Doe v. Luxton	48	Greenwall v. Low Beechburn
Doe v. Redfern	32	Colliery Co.	279
Doherty v. Allman	50	Gregson's Trusts	238
Dowse v. Gorton and Others..	248	Grenfell v. Dean of Windsor .	320
Drew v. Nunn	327
Drinkwater v. Ratcliffe	109	Hale v. Hale	156
Drybutter v. Bartholomew ..	307	Hall v. Lichfield Brewery Co.	279
Dudson's Contract, In re	41	Hampshire v. Wickens	210
Dugdale v. Dugdale	164	Hargreave v. Spink	216
Duke of Cleveland's Settled		Harris, In re , Fitzroy v. Harris	163
Estates, In re	242	Hart v. Windsor	209
Dungannon v. Smith	155	Henderson v. Astwood ..	173, 178
Dymond v. Croft.....	176	Hewitt, In re , Hewitt v. Hallett	109
		Heydon's Case.....	339
Eardley v. Granville	339	Hills v. Hills	224
Earl of Stafford v. Buckley ..	300	Homer, In re	328
Edmonds v. Blaina Furnaces		Honywood v. Honywood	51
Co.	308	Hood-Barrs v. Heriot (No. 1).	320
Egerton v. Brownlow	237	Hood-Barrs v. Heriot (No. 2).	320
Elias v. Snowdon Slate Quar-		Hooper v. Gunn	356
ries Co.	51	Howe v. Lord Dartmouth....	365
Elibank v. Montolieu	325	Hudson v. Henland	200
Elliot, In re , Kelly v. Elliot..	162	Hume, In re , Forbes v. Hume	335
Emmet's Estate, In re	240	Hurley v. Hanrahan	344
Eyre, Re	152
Eyre v. McDowell	168	Imray v. Oakahette	74
		Irons v. Smallpiece	217
Ferrand v. Yorkshire Banking
Co.	186	Jackson, In re	110
Ferrans v. O'Brien	4	Jagger v. Jagger	158
Fish, In re	238, 328

TABLE OF CASES.

xvii

	PAGE		PAGE
Jane Barden, In the goods of ..	229	Miles v. Harford	238
Jenner v. Turner	163	Mill v. Hill	353
Job v. Patton	112	Miller v. Dell	256
Johnson v. Cartney	349	Miller v. Race	217
John Young & Co. v. Bankier		Minter v. Carr	183
Distillery Co.	277	Mogridge v. Clapp	63
Jones, In re	60	Morgan v. Davies	69
Jones, In re , Farringdon v.		Morley v. Rennoldson	225
Forrester	111	Morrice v. Aylmer	307
Jones v. Gibbon	353	Moyce v. Newington	216
Jupp, Re , Jupp v. Burchwell ..	117	Mulliner v. Florence	292
		Mustapha v. Wedlake	224
Kennard v. Futvoye	187
Kennedy v. De Trafford	178	Natt, In re , Walker v. Gam-
Kenworthy v. Ward	104	mage	272
Key v. Key	237	New Land Development Asso-
Kilpin v. Ratley	218	ciation and Gray, In re	329
Kirkham v. Attenborough ..	221	Newbold v. Roadknight	244
		Nichols v. Hawkes	284
Lake v. Craddock	110	Nickells v. Atherstone	71
Lake v. Gibson	106	Northern Counties of England
Lampet's Case	142	Insur. Co. v. Whipp	186
Lancefield v. Iggliden	244	Noyes v. Pollock	173
Latouche v. Dunsany	182
Lechmere and Lloyd, Re	143	Odell, Ex parte	167
Leigh v. Dickeson	111	Owen's Estate, Re	354
Lemaître v. Davis	279	Oxendon v. Compton	327
Le Neve v. Le Neve	353
Leng, In re	36	Palmer v. Rich	110
Lloyd v. Tench	272	Papillon v. Voice	87
London Joint Stock Bank v.		Peacock v. Eastland	40
Simmons	297	Pelton Brothers v. Harrison ..	326
Lord Southampton v. Marquis		Perry v. Eames	367 of Hertford	159	Philpott v. Kelly	256
Loughran v. Loughran	177	Pigg v. Caley	19
Lumley, In re , Ex parte Hood-		Plant v. Bourne	199
Barrs	320	Pledge v. Carr	183
Lunham's Estate	34	Pocock and Prankard's Contract, In re	56
M'Elroy v. Brooke	346	Pollard's Settlement, In re ..	320
McEvoy v. McEvoy	356	Pople, In re	50
McFadden v. Jones	100	Pulling v. Great Eastern Rail-
Mairs v. Lecky	356	way Co.	300
Market Over, Case of	216
Markey v. Lord Gosford	344	Quarm v. Quarm	106
Marsh v. Lee	182	Queen v. Halifax County Court
Marshall v. Shrewsbury	185	Judge	310
Marshall v. Taylor	256
Marshfield, In re , Marshfield v.		Radcliffe, In re	72
Hutchins	178	Randall v. Russell	86
Mary Portington's Case	39	Reddaway v. Banham	316
Maskell and Goldfinch's Con-		Reeves v. Long	121
tract, In re	323	Regina v. White	6
Mead, In re , Austin v. Mead ..	224
Mervin, In re	155
Meux v. Cobley	51

	PAGE		PAGE
Reid v. Reid	326	Thomas v. Kelly	189
Ripley v. Waterworth	48	Thorn v. Heard & Marsh	97, 179
Robinson v. Cumming	219	Thornley v. Thornley	117
Roebuck v. Chadebet	109	Tottenham's Estate, Re	354
Rudge v. Richins	176	Trades Auxiliary v. Middle-
Rusell v. Russel	184	borough, &c. Trade Prot.
Ryder v. Mollroy	276	Ass.	814
		Turner, In re , Barber v.
Salt v. Marquess of North-		Ivimey	98
ampton	166	Tyler, In re , Tyler v. Tyler ..	166
Saxlehner v. Apollinaris Co. .	316	Tyrell's Case	93
Scobie v. Collins	171
Scott and Alvarez's Contract,		Vane v. Lord Barnard	50, 52
In re	200	Veal v. Veal	224
Scott, In re , Scott v. Hanbury	148
Scott v. Morley	326	Wallis v. Hands	71
Seroka v. Kattenberg	324	Walsh v. Lonsdale	208
Seymour v. Quicke	211	Walter v. Howe	313
Shelley's Case	124	Ward v. Ward	102
Sheward, In re , Sheward v.		Wardens of Cholomeley School
Brown	164	v. Sewell	74
Sidebotham v. Holland	69	Webb, In the goods of	233
Simmons v. Underwood	69	Weekes' Settlement, In re ..	160
Simpeon v. Hartopp	77	Weldon v. Neal	326
Sir Moyle Finch's Case	98	West London Commercial Bank
Skinner v. Uphaw	291	v. Reliance Permanent Build-
Smith v. Adkins	151	ing Society	178
Smith v. Anderson	303	Western v. Bailey	21
Smith v. Smith	180	Westminster's, Marquis of,
Smith v. Tibbett	327	Case	37
Snow v. Boycott	72	Wharton v. Masterman	158
Somes, In re , Somes v. Somes .	152	Whitby v. Mitchell	122
Spencer's Case	211	Whiteley v. Edwards	320
Stafford v. Selby	187	Wigram v. Buckley	198
Stanton v. Lambert	263	Wilks, In re	109, 111
Steele, In the goods of	236	Williams v. Owen	167
Stevens, In re	50	Williams v. Williams	43
Streatley, In the goods of	233	Williams and the Duchess of Strickland v. Strickland	268	Newcastle's Contract	18
Sutherland, Duchess of v. Duke		Willion v. Berkeley	29
of Sutherland	63	Willowes' Case	340
Sutton's Hospital	330	Wilton, Re	328
Sutton v. Buck	291	Wood, In re , Att.-Gen. v.
Sutton v. Sutton	179	Anderson	262
Swain v. Ayres	208	Woodhouse v. Walker	50, 52
Sweet, In the goods of	234	Wyatt v. Berry	233
Symes v. Symes	134
		Yates v. Aston	179
Taltarum's Case	39	York v. Stone	110
Tarn v. Turner	179
Taylor v. Meads	151	Zetland, Earl of v. Lord Ad-
Taylor v. Russell	186	vocate	28
Taylor v. Taylor	270
Tennison v. Sweeney	182

TABLE OF STATUTES.

	PAGE
9 Hen. 3, c. 32 (Subinfeudation)	31
20 Hen. 3, c. 4 (Statute of Merton: Common)	282
3 Edw. 1, c. 39 (Westminster 1st: Prescription)	278
13 Edw. 1, c. 1 (Westminster 2nd: De Donis Conditionalibus) ..	25, 37, 38
c. 18 (Westminster 2nd: Elegit)	35
c. 22 (Waste)	111
18 Edw. 1, c. 1 (Quia Emptores)	20, 32
4 Edw. 3, c. 7 (Injuries to Personal Estate)	299
4 Hen. 7, c. 24 (Fines)	38
15 Hen. 7, c. 2 (Assignments of Debts)	296
4 Hen. 8, c. 24 (Statute of Fines)	38
21 Hen. 8, c. 15 (Leaseholds: Remedy)	66
26 Hen. 8, c. 13 (Fees Tail: Forfeiture: Treason)	38, 261
27 Hen. 8, c. 10 (Statute of Uses)	66, 93, 104, 139, 263
c. 16 (Statute of Enrolments)	205
c. 28 (Tithes)	285
31 Hen. 8, c. 1 (Partition)	108
c. 13 (Tithes)	285
32 Hen. 8, c. 1 (Statute of Wills)	34, 82, 141, 227
c. 7 (Tithes)	285
c. 16, s. 23 (Aliens)	261
c. 32 (Partition)	108
c. 36 (Statute of Fines)	38, 39
33 Hen. 8, c. 39 (Crown Debts)	43, 45
34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 5 (Wills)	34, 141, 227
c. 36 (Fines and Recoveries)	39
2 & 3 Ph. & Mary, c. 7 (Sale of Horses)	217
13 Eliz. c. 5 (Conveyances to defeat Creditors)	196
27 Eliz. c. 4 (Conveyances to defraud Purchasers)	195
31 Eliz. c. 6	286
c. 12 (Sale of Horses)	217
43 Eliz. c. 4 (Charities)	333
21 Jac. 1, c. 3 (Monopolies)	310
c. 16 (Statute of Limitations)	256, 367
10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 6 (Irish) (Statute of Limitations (Ireland)) ..	256
12 Car. 2, c. 24 (Abolition of Knight Service Tenure)	20, 23, 24
22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10 (Statute of Distribution)	264

	PAGE
29 Car. 2, c. 3 (Statute of Frauds) .. 48, 99, 199, 203, 208, 219, 227, 287
1 Jac. 2, c. 17, s. 7 (Distributions: Widow's Share)	264
2 Will. & Mary, c. 5 (Distress: Corn)	77
4 & 5 Will. & Mary, c. 16 (Clandestine Mortgages)	172, 187
7 Will. 3, c. 13 (Irish) (Irish Statute of Frauds)	48, 99
10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 16 (Posthumous Children)	121
3 & 4 Anne, c. 9 (Promissory Notes)	297
4 Anne, c. 16, s. 27 (Account)	112
6 Anne, c. 2 (Irish) (Irish Registry Act)	162, 352, 353
c. 18 (Estates pur autre vie)	49
7 Anne, c. 20 (Middlesex Registry Act)	182
c. 25 (Promissory Notes)	297
8 Anne, c. 14 (Distress)	76
12 Anne, st. 2, c. 12 (Advowsons)	287
4 Geo. 2, c. 28 (Rent Seck, &c.)	33, 80
8 Geo. 2, c. 13 (Copyright: Engravings and Prints)	313
9 Geo. 2, c. 36 (Mortmain Act: Charities)	332
11 Geo. 2, c. 19 (Landlord and Tenant, &c.)	54, 77, 80
14 Geo. 2, c. 20 (Estates pur autre vie : Executors)	48
7 Geo. 3, c. 57 (Copyright: Engravings and Prints)	313
9 Geo. 3, c. 17 (Nullum Tempus Act: Prescription)	367
11 Geo. 3, c. 17, s. 5 (Advowsons: Papist Patrons)	287
17 Geo. 3, c. 57 (Copyright: Engravings and Prints)	313
26 Geo. 3, c. 43 (Irish) (Pawnbrokers Act)	188
38 Geo. 3, c. 71 (Copyright: Sculpture)	313
39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 16 (Thellusson Act: Accumulations)	158
54 Geo. 3, c. 71 (Copyright: Sculpture)	313
55 Geo. 3, c. 192 (Copyholds)	341
9 Geo. 4, c. 14 (Lord Tenterden's Act)	219
11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 46 (Illusory Appointments)	148
c. 47, s. 11 (Conveyances by Infants)	322
c. 68 (Carriers Act)	291
1 Will. 4, c. 32 (Game)	3
c. 65 (Infants' Property Act, 1830)	323
2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71 (Prescription: Easements, &c.)	279, 367
3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15 (Dramatic: Right to perform)	314
c. 27 (Limitations: Real Property) .. 7, 102, 256—258
c. 42 (Limitations: Torts, Bonds, &c.) .. 299, 300, 367
c. 74 (Abolition of Fines and Recoveries) .. 7, 39, 43, 44, 100, 324
c. 104 (Payment of Debts: Land)	36, 110
c. 105 (Dower Act)	264
c. 106 (Inheritance Act)	27, 126, 266—273
4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23 (Escheat: Trustee's Estate)	261
c. 92 (Irish Act for Abolition of Fines and Recoveries)	40

TABLE OF STATUTES.

xxi

	PAGE
7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 (Wills Act) .. 47, 49, 132, 148, 151, 226, 232, 234, 235—242, 284
1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 (Payment of Debts: Real Property) 35, 43, 45, 148, 299, 302
2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 7 (Lis pendens)	198
3 & 4 Vict. c. 28, s. 1 (Charging Order)	302
c. 113, s. 42 (Spiritual Patronage)	287
5 & 6 Vict. c. 38 (Law of Copyright, 1842)	313—315, 367
7 & 8 Vict. c. 12 (International Copyright)	313
c. 66 (Aliens)	261
c. 97 (Charities: Ireland)	335, 353
8 & 9 Vict. c. 106 (Real Property: Act to amend) 8, 54, 71, 108, 114, 128, 132, 133, 203
c. 112 (Satisfied Terms)	70
c. 118 (Inclosure Act)	282
9 & 10 Vict. c. 93 (Lord Campbell's Act)	299
c. 95 (Distress)	77
11 & 12 Vict. c. 29 (Game)	3
c. 36, s. 41 (Accumulations: Scotland)	158
12 & 13 Vict. c. 105 (Renewable Leaseholds: Ireland)	33, 34
13 & 14 Vict. c. 29 (Registration of Judgments)	168, 353
c. 60 (Trustees, &c.)	174
14 & 15 Vict. c. 25 (Emblements: Extension of Tenancy)	53
15 & 16 Vict. c. 12 (Copyright: Engravings and Prints)	313
c. 24 (Wills Act: Amendment)	233
c. 76 (Common Law Procedure)	73, 170
16 & 17 Vict. c. 113, ss. 20—23 (Irish Common Law Procedure: Limitations)	257, 367
17 & 18 Vict. c. 31 (Railway and Canal Traffic Act)	291
c. 90 (Enrolment of Annuities)	283
18 & 19 Vict. c. 43 (Infants' Settlements)	148, 323
c. 111 (Bills of Lading Act, 1855)	223
20 & 21 Vict. c. 60 (Irish Bankrupt Act, 1857)	251
c. 77 (Court of Probate Act)	230
c. 79 (Irish Probate Act)	230
21 & 22 Vict. c. 72 (Sale and Transfer of Land (Ireland)) .. 177, 185, 211, 354
c. 95 (Court of Probate: Amendment Act)	230
22 & 23 Vict. c. 35 (Law of Property)	73, 151, 247, 266, 268
23 & 24 Vict. c. 38 (Law of Property)	73
c. 127 (Solicitors)	292
c. 154 (Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1860) .. 33, 71, 75, 344, 345
24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 80 (Trustee: Criminal Liability)	97
c. 114 (Foreign Wills Act)	234
c. 121 (Domicile)	235

	PAGE
25 & 26 Vict. c. 68 (Copyright: Pictures and Photographs)	313
c. 89 (Companies Act, 1862)	304—309
26 & 27 Vict. c. 41 (Innkeepers Act)	291
c. 92 (Railways)	291
27 & 28 Vict. c. 95 (Personal Torts)	299
c. 112 (Judgments and Land)	35, 43
28 & 29 Vict. c. 72 (Merchant Shipping)	232
c. 88 (Record of Title (Ireland) Act, 1865)	354
c. 122 (Simony)	286
30 & 31 Vict. c. 47, s. 2 (Lis pendens)	198
c. 131 (Companies Act, 1867)	304
c. 144 (Assurance Assignments: Life)	298
31 & 32 Vict. c. 40 (Partition)	108
c. 54 (Judgment Extension Act, 1868)	35
c. 86 (Assurance Assignments: Marine)	298
32 & 33 Vict. c. 46 (Specialty Debts)	36
c. 62 (Debtors Act, 1869)	326
33 & 34 Vict. c. 14 (Naturalization Act, 1870)	329
c. 23 (Forfeiture: Treason and Felony)	261, 329
c. 35 (Apportionment Act, 1870)	53, 87
c. 46 (Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act)	345—347
c. 71 (National Debt Act)	301
c. 93 (Married Women's Property Act, 1870)	325
34 & 35 Vict. c. 22 (Lunacy Act (Ireland))	327
c. 79 (Lodgers' Goods)	77
35 & 36 Vict. c. 58 (Irish Bankruptcy: Amendment Act)	251
c. 93 (Pawnbrokers Act (England))	188
36 & 37 Vict. c. 66 (Judicature Act, 1873)	52, 84, 86, 112, 150, 298
37 & 38 Vict. c. 37 (Appointments)	150
c. 57 (Real Property Limitation Act, 1874) ..	42, 256—258
c. 62 (Infants' Relief Act)	322
c. 78 (Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874)	200
38 & 39 Vict. c. 77 (Judicature Act, 1875)	36
c. 87 (Land Transfer Act, 1875)	168, 183, 211
39 & 40 Vict. c. 17 (Partition)	108
c. 29 (Game)	3
c. 56 (Inclosure Act)	282
40 & 41 Vict. c. 18 (Settled Estates Act, 1877)	55, 58
c. 33 (Contingent Remainders)	134, 143
c. 57 (Judicature Act (Ireland))	171
41 & 42 Vict. c. 31 (Bills of Sale Act, 1878)	188
c. 38 (Innkeepers Act, 1878)	292
42 & 43 Vict. c. 50 (Bills of Sale (Ireland) Act, 1879)	188
44 & 45 Vict. c. 41 (Conveyancing Act, 1881) ..	23, 28, 33, 70, 73, 100, 152, 171, 173—175, 177, 183, 185, 201, 211, 276

TABLE OF STATUTES.

	PAGE
44 & 45 Vict. c. 49 (Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881)	347—350
45 Vict. c. 15 (Inclosure)	282
45 & 46 Vict. c. 38 (Settled Land Act, 1882)	45, 55, 58—64, 319, 323
c. 39 (Conveyancing Act, 1882)	70, 152, 180
c. 40 (Copyright: Musical Composition)	314
c. 43 (Bills of Sale Act, 1882)	188
c. 61 (Bills of Exchange Act, 1882)	296
c. 75 (Married Women's Property Act, 1882)	109, 117, 148, 263, 325, 326
46 & 47 Vict. c. 52 (Bankruptcy Act, 1883)	43, 148, 250—255
c. 57 (Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883)	310—312, 313, 315
c. 61 (Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883)	69, 77
c. 71 (Bills of Sale (Ireland) Act, 1883)	188
47 & 48 Vict. c. 18 (Settled Land Act, 1884)	58
c. 54 (Yorkshire Registry Act)	182
c. 71 (Intestates' Estates Act, 1884)	100, 261, 284
48 & 49 Vict. c. 63 (Patents, &c. Act: Amendment)	310
c. 73 (Land Purchase (Ireland) Act, 1885)	356
49 & 50 Vict. c. 27 (Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886)	363
c. 33, s. 8 (Copyright)	313
50 & 51 Vict. c. 33 (Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887)	356
c. 66 (Bankruptcy Act, 1887)	250
51 & 52 Vict. c. 2 (National Debt Act, 1888)	301
c. 17 (Copyright: Musical Composition, 1888)	315
c. 21 (Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888)	77
c. 33 (Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887)	350
c. 42 (County Courts Act, 1888)	77, 324
c. 47 (Law of Distress (Ireland) Act, 1888)	78
c. 50 (Patents, &c. Act: Amendment)	310, 315
c. 51 (Land Charges Registration)	35
c. 59 (Trustee Act, 1888)	97
c. 62 (Bankruptcy: Preferential Payments)	251
52 & 53 Vict. c. 36 (Settled Land Act, 1889)	58
c. 45 (Factors Act, 1889)	217
53 Vict. c. 5 (Lunacy Act, 1890)	327
53 & 54 Vict. c. 29 (Intestates' Estates Act, 1890)	264
c. 39 (Partnership Act, 1890)	108
c. 63 (Companies' Winding-up Act, 1890)	306
c. 69 (Settled Land Act, 1890)	58
c. 71 (Bankruptcy Act, 1890)	251
54 Vict. c. 8 (Tithe Act, 1891)	284
54 & 55 Vict. c. 39 (Stamp Act, 1891)	206
c. 48 (Land Purchase Act, 1891)	350
c. 57 (Redemption of Rent (Ireland) Act, 1891)	350
c. 65 (Lunacy Act, 1891)	327

	PAGE
54 & 55 Vict. c. 66 (Registration of Title (Ireland) Act, 1891)	350, 352—355
c. 73 (Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891)	241, 332—335
55 Vict. c. 6 (Colonial Probates Act, 1892)	230, 332
c. 11 (Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1892)	331
55 & 56 Vict. c. 13 (Conveyancing Act, 1892)	74
c. 58 (Accumulations Act, 1892)	159
56 & 57 Vict. c. 21 (Voluntary Conveyances Act, 1893)	195
c. 36 (Law of Distress (Ireland) Act, 1893)	78
c. 57 (Commons Amendment Act, 1893)	282
c. 63 (Married Women's Property Act, 1893)	326
c. 71 (Sale of Goods Act, 1893)	216, 217, 219—222, 302
57 & 58 Vict. c. 46 (Copyhold Act, 1894)	22, 340—342
c. 60 (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894)	219, 232, 329, 356—358
58 & 59 Vict. c. 24 (Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1895)	77
c. 25 (Mortgagees' Legal Costs Act, 1895)	175
59 & 60 Vict. c. 35 (Judicial Trustees Act, 1896)	96
c. 47 (Land Act (Ireland), 1896)	350
60 & 61 Vict. c. 65 (Land Transfer Act, 1897)	16, 36, 101, 148, 168, 211—215, 226, 228, 229, 231, 245, 248, 266

TABLE OF ABBREVIATIONS.

A. & E.	Adolphus and Ellis's Reports (Common Law , 1841 to 1852).
A. C.	Law Reports, House of Lords Cases (since 1890, distinguished by the year).
App. Cas.	Law Reports, House of Lords Cases (1875 to 1890).
Atk.	Atkyn's Reports (Chancery , 1736 to 1754).
Ball & B.	Ball and Beatty's Reports, Irish (Chancery , 1807 to 1814).
B. & A.	Barnewall and Alderson's Reports (Common Law , 1830 to 1834).
Beav.	Beavan's Reports (Chancery , 1838 to 1866).
Bl. Com.	Blackstone's Commentaries (15th edit., by E. Christian).
Bac. Abr.	Bacon's Abridgment.
Bligh, N. S.	Bligh's Reports, New Series (House of Lords Cases , 1827 to 1837).
Bro. Abr.	Brooke's Abridgment.
Bro. C. C.	Brown's Chancery Cases (1778 to 1794).
Burr.	Burrow's Reports (Common Law , 1756 to 1772).
Ch.	Law Reports, Chancery (since 1890, distinguished by the year).
Ch. App.	Law Reports, Chancery Appeals (1865 to 1875).
Ch. D.	Law Reports, Chancery Division (1875 to 1890).
C. P. Coop. temp. Cott.	Cooper's Chancery Reports in the time of Lord Cottenham (1846 to 1848).
Co. Litt.	Coke upon Littleton, being Vol. 1 of Coke's Institutes (Hargrave's Edition).
Coll.	Collyer's Reports (Chancery , 1844 to 1846).
Cox	Cox's Reports (Chancery , 1744 to 1797).
Dears.	Dearsley's Crown Cases Reserved (1852 to 1856).
De G. M. & G.	De Gex, Macnaghten and Gordon's Reports (Chancery , 1861 to 1867).

De G. & Sm.	De Gex and Smale's Reports (Chancery , 1846 to 1852).
Dr. & War.	Drury and Warren's Reports, Irish (Chancery , 1841 to 1843).
Dyer	Dyer's Reports (Common Law , 1613 to 1682).
East.....	East's Reports (Common Law , 1800 to 1812).
Eden	Eden's Reports (Chancery , 1757 to 1766).
E. & B.	Ellis and Blackburn's Reports (Common Law , 1852 to 1857).
Eq. Cas. Abr.	Equity Cases Abridged (1667 to 1744).
Giff.	Gifford's Reports (Chancery , 1857 to 1865).
Gilb. Ten.	Gilbert's Tenures.
Ha.	Hare's Reports (Chancery , 1841 to 1853).
Hawk. P. C.	Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown.
Hem. & M.	Hemming and Miller (Chancery , 1862 to 1865).
H. & B.	Hudson and Brooke's Reports, Irish (Common Law , 1827 to 1831).
H. L. C.....	Clarke's House of Lords Cases (1847 to 1866).
Inst.	Coke's Institutes (Vols. 2, 3, and 4. See Coke on Littleton).
Ir. Eq.	Irish Equity Reports (1838 to 1850).
Ir. Ch.	Irish Chancery Reports (1850 to 1866).
Ir. C. L. R.	Irish Common Law Reports (1849 to 1866).
Ir. R. Eq.	Irish Reports, Equity Cases (1867 to 1878).
Ir. R. C. L.	Irish Reports, Common Law Cases (1867 to 1878).
Ir. R.	Irish Reports (Common Law and Equity, since 1893, distinguished by the year).
Ir. L. T. R.	Irish Law Times Reports (all Courts).
Jur.	Jurist Reports (all Courts , 1837 to 1866).
Key & Elphin.	Key and Elphinstone's Conveyancing Precedents (4th edit.).
L. J. Ch.	Law Journal, Chancery Cases (since 1852).
L. J. Ex. or C. P.	Law Journal, Exchequer or Common Pleas Cases (1852 to 1875).
L. J. Q. B.	Law Journal, Queen's Bench Cases (since 1852).
L. R. Ir.	Law Reports, Ireland (Chancery and Common Law , 1866 to 1876).
L. R. C. P.	Law Reports, Common Pleas Cases (1866 to 1875).
L. R. Ex.	Law Reports, Exchequer Cases (1866 to 1875).
L. R. Q. B.	Law Reports, Queen's Bench Cases (1866 to 1875).
L. R. Eq.	Law Reports, Equity Cases (1866 to 1875).

L. R. P. & M.	Law Reports, Probate and Matrimonial Cases (1866 to 1875).
L. T.	Law Times Reports (all Courts, since 1859).
M. & C.	Mylne and Craig's Reports (Chancery, 1836 to 1840).
M. & M.	Moody and Malkin's Reports (Common Law, 1826 to 1830).
M. & W.	Meeson and Welsby's Reports (Common Law, 1836 to 1847).
Mac. & G.	Macnaghten and Gordon's Reports (Chancery, 1849 to 1851).
MacD.	MacDevitt's Land Cases, Irish.
Meriv.	Merivale's Reports (Chancery, 1815 to 1817).
P.	Law Reports, Probate Cases (since 1890, distinguished by the year).
P. Wms.	Peere Williams' Reports (Chancery, 1695 to 1735).
Ph.	Phillips' Reports (Chancery, 1841 to 1849).
Plow.	Plowden's Reports (Common Law, 1550 to 1580).
Prest. Abst.	Preston on Abstracts of Title (2nd edit., 1823).
Prest. Est.	Preston on Estates (2nd edit., 1820, 1827).
Q. B.	Law Reports, Queen's Bench Cases (since 1890, distinguished by the year).
Q. B.	Adolphus and Ellis's Queen's Bench Reports (1841 to 1852).
Q. B. D.	Law Reports, Queen's Bench Division (1875 to 1890).
R. & My.	Russell and Mylne's Reports (Chancery, 1826 to 1829).
R. S. C.	Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883.
Raym.	Lord Raymond's Reports (Common Law, 1694 to 1732).
Rep.	Coke's Reports (Common Law, 1579 to 1616).
Rev. St.	Revised Statutes.
Rob. Gav.	Robinson on Gavelkind (3rd edit., 1823).
Salk.	Salkeld's Reports (Common Law, 1689 to 1711).
Sch. & L.	Schoales and Lefroy's Reports, Irish (Chancery, 1802 to 1806).
Sim.	Simon's Reports (Chancery, 1826 to 1849).
Sm. L. C.	Smith's Leading Cases (Common Law).
Spence Eq. Jur.	Spence's Equitable Jurisdiction.
Strange	Strange's Reports (Common Law, 1716 to 1746).
Sugd. Pow.	Sugden on Powers (8th edit.).
T. R.	Durnford and East's Term Reports (Common Law, 1786 to 1800).

Taunt.	Taunton's Reports (Common Law , 1807 to 1819).
Vent.	Ventris's Reports (Common Law , 1668 to 1691).
Vern.	Vernon's Reports (Chancery , 1680 to 1719).
Ves. Sen.	Vesey Senior's Reports (Chancery , 1747 to 1755).
Ves.	Vesey Junior's Reports (Chancery , 1789 to 1816).
Ves. & B.	Vesey and Beame's Reports (1812 to 1814).
W. & T.	White and Tudor's Leading Cases (Chancery).
W. N.	Weekly Notes (all Courts , since 1866).
W. R.	Weekly Reporter (all Courts , since 1852).
Wils.	Wilson's Reports (Common Law , 1742 to 1769).

NOTE.

Plant v. Bourns (infra, p. 199), has been reversed on appeal, (1897) 2 Ch. 281.

A GENERAL VIEW OF THE LAW OF PROPERTY.

PART I. OWNERSHIP AND THINGS OWNED.

	PAGE
Meanings of Property	1
Right of Ownership	2
Things Ownable	2
Division of Things Owned	5
Technical Divisions	5
Natural Divisions	9
Absolute Ownership, Characteristics:—
Indefinite in User	10
Unrestricted in Disposition	11
Unlimited in Duration	11
Partial Ownership	11
Interests in Things Owned	13
Arrangement of Work	13

Meanings of "Property."—Property is a word of many meanings. Austin, in his "Lectures on Jurisprudence" (Lecture XLVII.), enumerates some eleven senses in which it is more or less commonly used. With most of these we are not at present concerned. It is sufficient for our purpose to refer to two of them, as by the failure clearly to distinguish between these much confusion may be introduced into an exposition of the law of property.

The term "property," then, is commonly used to signify the right of ownership in a thing. That is what we mean by it when we say the property in certain lands is in a certain person. On the other hand, it is also commonly used to signify the thing over which a right of ownership subsists. That is what we mean by it when we say certain lands are a certain person's property. As far as the law is concerned it matters little in which of these senses the term is used, but it matters a great deal that it should always be clear in which sense it is being used. To prevent any ambiguity we will hereafter always use it in the former sense, that is, as meaning the right of ownership and not the thing owned, unless in cases when the context will clearly show the latter meaning is intended.

Right of Ownership.—The question then arises, what is meant by the right of ownership? No satisfactory definition of the term exists, but perhaps the best description is that given by Austin. He describes the right of ownership, or dominium, as "a right over a determinate thing, indefinite in point of user, unrestricted in point of disposition, and unlimited in point of duration." (Austin: Lecture XLVII.)

Things Ownable.—The first point to be noted in this description is that the only things which can be owned are determinate things, that is, actually existing physical objects. Thus we can own a piece of land or a sum of money; that is, we can have it in our exclusive possession and control, to do with it as we like, dispose of it to whom we like, and keep it as long as we like. We cannot in this sense own a debt, or a patent, or a copyright, all of which are mere creations of the law, without any physical embodiments over which physical power can be exercised. Accordingly, strictly speaking, such rights are not property at all according to Austin, and in this work we will not treat them as such. As, however, it is usual, and on the whole convenient, to deal in treatises on the law of property with rights of this kind, which are in a secondary sense proprietary in their nature, we will, after we have disposed of the ownership of physical objects, devote a chapter to their consideration.

Physical objects alone, then, are subjects of ownership. But all physical objects cannot be owned. For example, there cannot by English law be any property in a human body, living or dead. With this exception, however, it may be said generally that any material thing of which physical possession can be taken may be owned.

Material things, however, of which physical possession has been taken by no one, are the property of no one (res nullius). Thus, wild birds, wild beasts, fish in rivers or in the sea, belong to nobody until they are captured, when they become, as a rule, the property of the captor. (See infra, p. 192.) As long as he keeps possession of them his property in them continues; but should they escape completely out of his possession they are again res nullius, and will become the property of the first person who recaptures them. Domestic animals do not, of course, come within this rule, the property of their owner in them being as complete and permanent as in land or other goods; but what at first sight appears to constitute an exception to the rule occurs in the case of animals which, though strictly speaking not domestic nor in captivity, yet nevertheless have what is called an animus revertendi, such, for example, as pigeons attached to a dovecot; as long as such pigeons habitually return to the dovecot the law regards them as the property of the owner of the dovecot. This, however, is rather an extension of the notion of possession than of the doctrine of property. And a partial exception has been created by the Game Laws (1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 29; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 29), which give to the occupier of land a property in the game on the land as long as it remains upon it. Independently of the Game Laws, the occupier of land seems to be entitled to all wild animals actually killed or captured, whether by himself or a stranger, on his own land, though it is doubtful if this be so when the wild animal was started on another's land and pursued to and taken upon his. (But see Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. of L. Cas. 621.)

Whether there can be any property, strictly speaking, in water, has been doubted. (2 Bl. Com. 18.) Recent decisions seem to have dissipated that doubt. In the words of Lord Halsbury, L.C., in Mayor, &c. of Bradford v. Pickles ((1895) A. C. 587, at p. 593), "you may have a property in the water when it is collected and appropriated and reduced into possession." But, as Blackstone says, water is "a moveable, wandering thing," and if it escapes out of your possession no action will lie for its recovery. (2 Bl. Com. 18.) Moreover, the fact that water flows over your land, or percolates through it, does not put it in your possession so as to give you a property in it, but merely entitles you to the free use of it as long as it is on your land. (See infra, p. 276.) Water, however, confined in a pond or reservoir upon your land is, it is submitted, your property, though, as it is part of the land, it may not be the subject of larceny at common law, which it would be if separated from the land and confined in cisterns or pipes.¹ (Ferrens v. O'Brien, 11 Q. B. D. 21.)

¹ It is usually assumed (and was so assumed by me in the previous edition of this work) that Blackstone denies that any property can be acquired at common law in water. Though some of his expressions seem to go this length (such as "water . . . must of necessity continue common by the law of nature"), I doubt, on a closer perusal of his words, whether he intended to lay down any such proposition. He is discussing what was included under the term "land," and in doing so he objects to water on the land being considered to be included under that term, on the ground that no action lies for the recovery of a pond of water separately from the land on which it is (which may be doubtful), or for the recovery of water which has escaped from the land (which seems certain). This leads him to general comments on the transient nature of the property in water as compared with the permanent nature of property in the land on which it is. No doubt, he speaks as if water was always free and flowing, but I do not think he intended to say that it could not become so reduced into possession as to give the possessor an absolute property in it.

Other "moveable, wandering things," such as gases, seem to be subject to the same rule as water. As long as they are in the physical possession of the owner, he has a property in them. (Reg. v. White, Dears. 203.) But once they completely escape from his possession, they become res nullius. (Pollock and Wright on Possession, p. 232.)

Divisions of Things Owned.—Physical objects which are subject to ownership may be divided in two ways. They may be divided according to their legal characteristics, or they may be divided according to their natural characteristics. In the former case, the classes of things resulting will be classes peculiar to the legal system under which the division is made. In the latter case, the classes will be independent of any legal system, as the principle of division is the inherent quality of the things themselves. In other words, the actual division in the former case is between different kinds of ownership, while in the latter case it is truly between different kinds of things owned, or, to put it more shortly, the former is a technical, the latter a natural division of things owned.

Technical Divisions of English Law.—One of the earliest classifications of things owned recognized by English law was that into lands, tenements, and hereditaments on the one hand, and goods and chattels on the other. By lands were meant not merely the soil, but everything built upon it (as houses), and everything attached to it (as fixtures), and everything growing upon it (as trees), and everything beneath to the very centre (as minerals). As the maxim says, Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum, et usque ad inferos. Water, however, flowing over or under the land or percolating through it did not come within the term lands. The law regarded it much as it regarded the air covering the land—as an unstable material, which the owner of the land was entitled to use freely, but in which he had no precise property. (See infra, p. 4.) But water confined upon the land is, it is submitted, part of the land as long as it remains there. (See Co. Litt. 4 a.) Tenements meant anything that could be held by common law tenure. We shall see later on that it is a fundamental principle of English law that all land belongs to the Crown, and subjects can only hold it as tenants, while a subject's ownership in goods is absolute. Hereditaments meant things which, on the death of the owner intestate, went to his heir—not to his administrators—by hereditary succession, and not by special occupancy. (Co. Litt. 6 a; infra, p. 48.) It will be noted that the terms tenements and hereditaments, as thus used, referred rather to the nature of the owners' rights than to the nature of the thing over which they subsisted. All things not lands, tenements, or hereditaments, were goods and chattels. This division, as we shall see, is still of much practical importance.

Out of this earlier classification of things owned rose the later classification which now obtains—that into Things Real, or Realty, and Things Personal, or Personalty. It arose in this way. For the wrongful taking of land a real action lay; that is, an action in which the thing itself (res) could be recovered. For the wrongful taking of goods, on the other hand, only a personal action lay; that is, an action in which the sole remedy was by way of damages against the person of the wrongdoer. The reason of this difference of remedy was in the difference in the nature of the things themselves, land (unlike goods) being incapable of being so dealt with as to be destroyed, taken out of the jurisdiction of the Court, or otherwise rendered irrecoverable.¹

¹ Perhaps it was also partly due to the contempt with which early law usually regards all forms of property save property in land and in things connected with land. This would afford lawyers an additional reason for holding leaseholds to be not land but chattels, since for a long time after they were fully protected, and even to the present day they were regarded by the law as an inferior and base form of property.

Lawyers, however, took not the reason of the remedy but the remedy itself as the principle on which to divide things owned. And when new interests in land grew up, for the wrongful taking of which the law gave only a personal action, it ranked land, as far as these new interests were concerned, as personalty, and attached to its ownership the characteristics of ownership of goods. Of course, no doctrine of lawyers could change the essential nature of the thing, and the law as to goods was necessarily considerably altered when it came to be applied to land. Lawyers recognized this alteration by calling interests in land for which no real action lay not chattels, but chattels real, that is, goods partaking of the nature of land. Sometimes they are treated as if they were a class of things by themselves, as in the classification "Realty, Personalty, and Mixed."

The whole system of real actions has disappeared (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 35; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74; see infra, p. 40), and now the thing itself can be recovered in an action, even though it be a chattel real, and sometimes even though it be pure personalty. But the old classification of things owned into realty and personalty still maintains itself throughout English law.

The classification, like other technical classifications, is one rather of kinds of ownership than of kinds of things. Real ownership and personal ownership have of late approximated greatly, chiefly by realty assuming legal attributes formerly characteristic of personalty. The primary difference now, from a public point of view, lies in the modes of devolution on the death of the owner, and from a lawyer's point of view, in the modes of conveying from one owner to another, and of parcelling out the ownership among successive persons—limiting the property as it is called. These will be explained later on.

As to the things which are subject to each of these kinds of ownership, we are concerned now only with physical objects, and of these land alone is subject to real ownership. Land here is used in the legal significance already explained. Personal ownership, on the other hand, attaches to chattels real and to all ownable things which are not land, nor connected with land, such as money, cattle, furniture, books, clothes, &c. Even some things connected with land are personalty while they are still connected with it, as growing crops (see "Emblements," p. 53, infra), and other things remain realty only as long as they are actually connected with land, becoming personalty as soon as they are severed from it, as trees or minerals. Game and wild animals (animals feræ naturæ), while uncaptured, are not, strictly speaking, owned at all—as has been explained already—but the right to capture them goes with the legal possession of the land, unless parted therefrom by agreement or franchise.

Another technical classification of things owned which is recognized in English law is the division into things corporeal and things incorporeal. Originally this division was confined to hereditaments, and arose out of the ancient system of conveyancing. By a corporeal hereditament was meant a hereditament which could be transferred inter vivos only by livery of seisin or delivery of the actual possession of the thing (see infra, p. 203); by an incorporeal hereditament, a hereditament which might be transferred inter vivos by a deed of grant. (See infra, p. 206.) Thus, a future interest in land—that is, one which does not entitle its owner to the possession of the land till an existing interest has come to an end (see infra, p. 118)—was an incorporeal hereditament, because, since its owner was not entitled at the time of the transfer to the possession of the land, he could not be required to transfer it on transferring the interest or hereditament. And all those detached rights over land belonging to another, such as rights to graze cattle on another's field, or to take fish in another's water, or to receive rent or tithes issuing out of another's land (see infra, p. 284), carrying with them no right to the possession of the land itself, were also incorporeal hereditaments, and transferable inter vivos by grant. So, too, were certain mere rights not connected with land or any other physical object, such as annuities and shares in ancient corporations (see infra, pp. 300, 307), which, since they had no physical existence, could not be transferred by delivery of possession.

The rule of the common law, which rendered livery of seisin the only valid mode of transfer of corporeal hereditaments, was long ago evaded, as we shall shortly see, and now it has been abolished by the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106); but the division between things corporeal and things incorporeal, though it has ceased to have any considerable importance, even as regards hereditaments, has not merely been preserved, but has been by many writers extended to goods and chattels. It is now used for the purpose of distinguishing between tangible things, such as lands and goods—that is, physical objects—and certain rights over lands, such as rights of grazing cattle on another's land (supra), and rights which apply to no physical objects whatever, but are the mere creatures of the law, such as annuities (supra), debts (infra, p. 294), patent rights, copyrights, and such like rights (see infra, p. 309), which, strictly speaking, are not property at all, but merely proprietary rights in the looser sense of those words. (See supra, p. 2.) Used in this sense the term, “things incorporeal,” may be, to some extent, convenient, but its convenience, at any rate in an elementary book, is more than counterbalanced by the fact that it confuses things which are physical objects with what are merely rights either over physical objects, or rights which refer to no physical objects, but to mere acts or conduct of individuals. In this work this division of things will not accordingly be used as the basis of any arrangement of the subject-matter.

Natural Divisions of Things Owned.—The most obvious and far-reaching classification of things owned is into Immoveables and Moveables. As we have seen, this is the classification which lies at the base of that into lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and goods and chattels, and of that into things real and things personal. It is one arising out of essential differences in the nature of the things themselves, differences which must affect the character of the ownership of each, and which the law cannot, even if it wishes, altogether disregard, as we have seen in the case of chattels real.

- Immoveables are incapable of being taken beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and though they may be damaged they are in their essence imperishable. Such being the case, it is obvious that the rights and the remedies of their owner must differ largely from those of the owner of a thing which is both moveable and destructible.

Whenever, henceforth, it is necessary to classify or distinguish kinds of things owned, we will adopt this division into things immoveable and things moveable, or, more shortly, into land and goods, treating the division into things real and thing personal as what it really is, not primarily a classification of things owned, but a classification of rights of ownership, which, though originally based on the inherent differences in the nature of things owned, no longer follows the lines of those differences.

Ownership: Indefinite in Point of User.—According to the dictum of Austin which has been cited, the first characteristic of the right of ownership, whether over land or goods, is that it entitles the owner to use the thing owned in such a variety of ways that it is impossible to define them. This right of user, it is to be observed, is not unlimited; it is only indefinite; incapable, that is, of being exhaustively summed up. In English law, it is usually negatively described as the right to use your land and goods in all ways, save such as would injure those of another person. (Sic utere tuo ut alienum non ledas.) Thus, the owner of a close of land may farm it, let it lie fallow, build upon it, take the soil off it, or the minerals or clay out of it, live upon it, ride or walk over it, or use it in any of a hundred other ways just as he may feel inclined. But he cannot dig a hole on the confines of it so deep as to cause the soil of the next close to fall into it (see infra, p. 276), nor can he carry on a noisome trade or do any other act upon it which will be a nuisance to his neighbour; that would be so using it as to injure the right of his neighbour to the full enjoyment of his own land.

Ownership : Unrestricted in Point of Disposition.—The second characteristic of ownership, according to Austin, is that the owner's right to dispose of the thing owned is unrestricted. This is what is called in law the power of alienation. Formerly, in English law, this power was restricted as to some kinds of things, and more particularly as to interests in land, both in respect of alienation inter vivos and alienation by will. But the leaning of the Courts and the tendency of legislation has been towards freeing the right to alienate from all restriction, and now it may be said generally that any person not under disability may dispose freely of any thing or any interest in a thing to which he is entitled. (See infra, p. 318.)

Ownership : Unlimited in Point of Duration.—The third characteristic, according to Austin, of the right of ownership is that it is unlimited in point of duration. This means not that the right exists for ever, but that it is capable of existing as long as the thing owned exists. Ownership in perishable articles, like fruit or flowers, is just as complete as it is in articles that may last for ever, like gems or land, provided that in neither case is there a limit of time fixed at which the right must expire, whether the thing is then in existence or not. If such a limit be fixed, the ownership is only temporary and incomplete.

Partial Ownership.—Ownership, then, is a right of unlimited duration to use the thing owned in an indefinite number of ways and to dispose of it freely. But, as has already been indicated, in many cases some of these characteristics of ownership may be absent or qualified. In such instances the ownership is not complete or absolute, but incomplete or partial.

Incomplete or partial ownership may arise in either of two ways. The rights of an owner may be cut down by positive law. We have examples of that in the case of infants' property and estates settled by Parliament to accompany titles. In these instances, the power of disposition has been taken away from the owner, in the first case temporarily: in the second, permanently. (See Part VII.)

The second, and more important, way in which partial ownership arises is through the division of the full ownership among various persons. For example, the right of user may be divided between two or more persons, while all the other rights of ownership are vested in one of them. Thus, in the case of a right of way (infra, p. 277), one person is entitled to use the land to walk upon, while another is entitled to all the remainder of the ownership in it. Again, one person may be entitled to have his house supported by the soil or house belonging to another person. (Infra, p. 276.) In both these cases the user of the soil or house is divided between these two persons. Again, the right of disposition may be divided between two or more persons, while all the other rights of ownership are vested in one of them. Thus, it is frequently provided in marriage settlements that the appointment (or disposition) of the settled funds of the wife during the continuance of the marriage (or coverture, as it is technically called) shall be made by the wife and husband jointly. Here the right of disposition over the wife's property is divided between her and the husband.

Again, ownership may be divided among several persons as to duration: one may be entitled to the thing owned for life or for a number of years, and another to it on the death of the first person or on the expiration of his term. This is incomparably the most common mode of dividing ownership, and also the most important, since limiting one person's right to a thing in point of time imposes on him a limit as to user and as to disposition also. If a man's ownership of anything is merely temporary, he must, on equitable principles, be restrained from using the thing in such a way as to damage the next owner of it, and he must not dispose of any greater right to the thing than he himself possesses.

Interests in Things Owned.—It is not usual to regard a person having merely a share in the right of user or of disposition of a thing as having any share in its ownership. The share he possesses is so small compared to the whole right that it would only lead to confusion to rank him beside the person entitled to the remainder of the ownership. It is usual to regard the latter as the sole owner and the former as entitled merely to a right over a thing belonging to the other, a jus in re aliena as civilians call it. This is so even in the case of a person having the absolute right of disposition (or as it is called a general power of appointment) over a thing, without the other rights of an owner, though such an authority enables him to turn himself or anyone else into owner at any time, and therefore is equivalent to potential ownership. (See infra, p. 147.)

When the ownership is divided as to duration, all the persons between whom the whole ownership is parcelled out are regarded as owners. Each of them has what is called an interest in the thing owned, while all together they have the interest or the whole interest in it.

Arrangement of the Work.—In the following pages we will consider, firstly, What interests can, according to English law, subsist in things owned; secondly, How these interests can be held; and thirdly, How they can be acquired and disposed of. After that we will consider those rights in things owned by others to which we have already referred, and those rights which are commonly considered property, but which, as they do not subsist over physical objects, are not property in the strict sense of the term. Finally, we will discuss the disabilities which the law imposes upon certain persons in relation to ownership and proprietary rights.

PART II.

KINDS OF INTERESTS IN THINGS OWNED.

	PAGE
Ownership of Land and Goods.....	15
Tenure of Land	16
Estates in Land	17
Title Deeds and Heirlooms	17
SECTION I.—INTERESTS IN LAND	18
Sub-section (1).— Freehold Interests	26
(a.) Estates in Fee Simple.....	29
(b.) Estates in Fee Tail	37
(c.) Estates for Life	45
A. Settlements of Freeholds.....	55
Sub-section (2).— Chattel Interests	65
(a.) Tenancy for Time Certain.....	68
(b.) Tenancy at Will	78
(c.) Tenancy by Sufferance	79
B. Settlements of Chattel Interests	80
SECTION II.—INTERESTS IN GOODS	82
(a.) At Law	82
(b.) In Equity	83
C. Settlements of Goods	87

Ownership of Land and Goods.—In English law the most characteristic distinctions between ownership of land and ownership of goods are these: (1) At common law the ownership of land is never absolute, while the ownership of goods is never anything but absolute. (2) At common law the whole ownership which the law permits over land may be divided among several persons entitled in succession; while the absolute ownership of goods cannot be cut up into successive interests.

Tenure of Land.—By the theory of English law, the king is “sovereign lord or lord paramount, either mediate or immediate, of all and every parcell of land within the realme.” (Co. Litt. 65 a.) In other words, however great the interest of any person in any parcel of English land may be, there is, over and above his interest, an ultimate interest residing in the Crown. There is no such ultimate interest residing in the Crown as regards goods. Put shortly, land is, and goods are not, the subject of tenure.

At one time this doctrine of tenure was a matter of vast practical importance. As we shall presently see, it imposed obligations on the owner of an interest in land so heavy as to constitute it a real diminution of the right of ownership. These obligations have been almost entirely abolished, and the ultimate interest theoretically residing in the Crown is now only the ghost of a real interest long since passed away. But the former existence of these obligations and of this interest has deeply influenced the conception of ownership as regards land. Ownership of goods is regarded purely as a right; ownership of lands is regarded as a duty as well as a right. Being a duty, the law has been most careful to see that there is always someone in existence to discharge it. (Gilb. Tenures, p. 18.) This, as we shall see, has profoundly affected the whole system of conveyancing. (Infra, p. 122.) It has also caused the law to impose ownership of land on persons not desiring it. On the death of an owner of goods, his executors or next of kin are under no obligation to take over the ownership of his goods. On the death of an owner of land, if he has not by his will disposed of his land, the ownership of it vests in his heir-at-law, whether he wishes it or not.¹ And it has imposed on the owner of land the necessity of remaining owner of it until another person has been found to undertake that duty. The owner of goods can abandon them by any act which shows he desires to remain owner no longer, as by throwing them away. But the owner of land must retain the ownership till someone else acquires it.

¹ It is difficult to say how far this doctrine has been affected by sect. 1 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), which provides that freehold land shall, on the owner's death, vest in a real representative. Probably, however, it is impliedly repealed. (See infra, p. 265.)

Estates in Land.—Not merely can there be nothing but partial or incomplete ownership in land, but there can subsist at one and the same time a multitude of partial interests in the same plot of land vested in or belonging to as many different persons, who will be entitled in succession to the possession and profits of the land. At common law there can be no such successive interests in goods. This is commonly summed up by saying that land is not merely the subject of tenure, but the subject of estates; goods are the subject of neither.

Land being in its nature indestructible, the ownership of it must have certainty of duration. The law therefore allowed it to be divided according to duration. But goods are in their nature destructible, and therefore the ownership of them can have no certainty of duration. The law accordingly did not permit it to be divided according to duration. The ownership of goods might be divided as far as their use was concerned, as, for example, a horse belonging to one person might be hired by another. (See infra, p. 82.) But at common law a horse could not be given to one person for a year, and at the end of that year to another person absolutely. We shall see, however, how equity has, to a large extent, practically reversed the common law, and while theoretically leaving the doctrines of the latter untouched has allowed successive interests in goods to be created freely.

Title Deeds and Heirlooms.—Title deeds to land (as far as ownership is recognized in them) and heirlooms are exceptions to the common law rule that no partial interests can subsist in chattels. Title deeds are looked upon by the common law as "the sinews of the land." (Co. Litt. 6 a.) They pass with the ownership of the land (Williams and Duchess of Newcastle's Contract, (1897) 2 Ch. 144), and where partial interests subsist in the land they equally subsist in them. Heirlooms at common law are chattels which, by special custom, go with the land or with a freehold office. Crown jewels are the most notable example of them. What are usually meant by heirlooms are jewels, pictures, or plate, settled in trust to accompany land. (See infra, p. 88.) The limited interests thus created in these are not interests at common law.

SECTION I.

INTERESTS IN LAND.

	PAGE		PAGE
Origin of Tenure.....	18	Incidents of Free Tenure	23
Kinds of Tenure	19	Interests in Free Tenure	24
Free and Customary Tenures..	21	Sub-sect. 1. Freehold Interests ..	26
Free Socage	22	Sub-sect. 2. Chattel Interests ..	65

Origin of Tenure.—It would appear that, in Anglo-Saxon times, absolute or, as it is technically called, allodial ownership by individuals, or by groups of individuals, was the usual (though not the only) kind of ownership of land in England. Upon the Norman Conquest, however, much land was forfeited to the Crown, and William in granting this and other Crown lands out among his followers observed the custom which had grown up among the Teutonic tribes, who had lately overrun Western Europe. That custom was not to give the land absolutely, but to give it as a fief or feud—that is, to permit the follower to hold the land in return for services which he undertook to render to the king. William parcelled out most of the forfeited lands in this fashion among his barons and knights. They in their turn, with the consent of the Crown, parcelled out most of the lands so granted to them among their followers in the same way. And the followers might pursue the same practice, and so on ad infinitum. This process was called "subinfeudation." In each case the person making the grant (grantor) was the "lord" of the person to whom the grant was made (grantee), and the latter was the "tenant" (or person holding) of the lord. Every lord who had an overlord who was a subject, was called a "mesne" lord, and the king was overlord of all, or lord paramount. Tenants holding directly from the king, and therefore with no mesne lord between him and them, were called "tenants in capite." This system of tenures is what is known as the feudal system of land ownership.

At first, this system applied only to the land vested in the Crown at the Conquest and granted out by the king. But gradually it was extended by the Courts to all the land in the realm, until now it has become an axiom of English law that all English land owned by a subject is held mediately or immediately from the Crown. Allodial ownership can be in the king alone. (2 Bl. Com. 104.) The same doctrine applies to land in Ireland; but some doubt exists whether allodial lands in the hands of a subject may not still exist in Scotland. Indeed, it has been affirmed that mansees and glebes throughout Scotland are subjects of allodial ownership, and that the feudal system of tenure has never been introduced at all into the Orkneys. (Hargrave's note, Co. Litt. 65 a.)

Kinds of Tenure.—When the feudal system was introduced into England the population consisted primarily of two great classes—freemen and serfs or villeins.¹ Tenures followed this division. "Free" or "frank" tenure was the tenure of the freeman who enjoyed equal legal rights with his lord. "Base" or "villein" tenure was the tenure of the serf who had no legal rights as against his lord. So completely was this difference of tenure based upon difference of status, that a grant to a serf by his lord of a holding in free tenure enfranchised the slave.

¹ The last claim of villenage heard in Court was in 15 Jac. 1 (1618). (Pigg v. Caley, Noy, 27.)

Free tenure was divided into three classes according to the services incident to them:—Tenure in chivalry (such as knight-service and grand serjeanty), where the services were chiefly military and personal; Tenure in socage (such as free or common socage and petit serjeanty), where the services usually were fixed payments; and Tenure spiritual (such as frankalmoigne), where the services were religious. It is not worth our while to go further into the differences between these, since they are now matters of only antiquarian interest. By the Act for the Abolition of Military Tenures (12 Car. II. c. 24, A.D. 1662, see infra, p. 23), all free lay tenures are turned into free or common socage, and the incidents of tenure in chivalry and tenure in capite in socage—which were of a very burdensome description—are abolished, save only the honorary services in grand serjeanty, and socage relief which consists of a payment of one year's quit rent (18 Edw. I. c. 1) on the death of an owner in socage. And as to tenure spiritual, since the statute Quia Emptores (A.D. 1290, see infra, p. 32), it can only be created by the Crown.

Villein tenure at first was scarcely a legal tenure at all, since it conferred no legal rights upon the tenant as against the lord. It merely referred to the practice of lords granting permission to their villeins to use certain lands of their manors during their will and pleasure in consideration of certain base or villein services rendered by the grantees. The villein's sole title consisted of an entry to that effect upon the roll of the manor, and for a long time this entry only created a tenancy at will. The villein, however, was rarely disturbed in his possession. Not only so, but it became customary for the lord to continue the tenancy from father to son. Gradually the Courts took cognizance of this custom, and from being a favour it became a right. The tenant then ceased to be called a tenant at will and became a copyholder—a tenant holding by copy of court roll of the manor, and owning, subject to services rendered to the lord, a hereditary interest in the land granted. When this change had taken place villein tenure may be said to have become customary tenure. A copyholder's estate, however, is still a tenancy at will, except so far as it has been increased and made better by custom. (Per Rigby, L. J., Western v. Bailey, (1897) 1 Q. B. 86, at p. 91.)

Customary tenure is of two kinds, copyhold by custom of the manor, and copyhold by custom of ancient demesne, sometimes called customary freehold. The chief distinction between these is, that in the former the owner of the copyhold interest is expressed to hold it at the will of the lord of the manor, while in the latter these words are omitted. A further distinction is that the latter only occurs in lands which are stated in the Domesday Book to have been at the time of Edward the Confessor or William the Conqueror in the Crown as a provision for the support of its dignity. Of these then may be truly said what Lord Coke says of copyholds generally, that though meanly descended they come of an ancient house. (The Compleat Copyholder, s. 32.)

Free and Customary Tenures.—Customary tenure does not subsist between the customary tenant and the Crown, but between the customary tenant and the lord of the manor who is himself the free tenant under the Crown. Customary tenure is thus a derivative or subordinate tenure. Free tenure applies to all the lands of the realm; but as to some lands a secondary tenure applies as between the free tenant and the actual holder of the lands, which tenure the Courts recognize as established not by the Common Law, strictly speaking, but by custom. And free tenure being the proper Common Law tenure, in all cases where there is doubt whether the tenure is free or customary the law presumes it is free till the contrary is shown.

The chief characteristics of customary tenure are, Firstly, The tenant who becomes entitled either by purchase or descent from the previous tenant has no legal interest in the land till he is admitted by the lord of the manor. Secondly, Upon admission, he is liable to certain customary payments to the lord. Thirdly, Save in manors where there is a custom to the contrary, the timber upon and the minerals in the land belong to the lord. Subject to these qualifications, customary ownership corresponds pretty generally to free ownership.

The importance of customary tenure has of late greatly declined owing to the enfranchising acts now consolidated in the Copyhold Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 46), which have enabled copyholders to turn their tenure into free socage by buying out the interest of the lord of the manor. What we now say will apply only to lands in free tenure, unless copyholds are expressly included. A more particular description of customary tenure is given in Appendix A.

Free Socage.—All the land in the realm not in the Crown is, as we have seen, now held in socage tenure. Land so held, if the tenant has a heritable interest at common law in it, descends on his death intestate to the common law heir. This is the rule, but exceptions to it are made by local custom. Thus, by the custom of Kent, gavelkind lands descend, when there are more than one son, not to the eldest son exclusively (who is the common law heir), but to all the sons in equal portions (who together constitute the customary heir). (Rob. Gavel. 112, 3rd ed.) The custom of Kent attaches other incidents to gavelkind lands which will be mentioned in their place, and though several private disgavelling acts have been passed, the presumption of law still is that all lands in Kent are gavel-kind till the contrary is shown. (Rob. Gav. 54.) Again, by the custom of certain ancient boroughs, land within them descends not to the eldest but to the youngest son. This custom is called borough-english, and is usually annexed to lands in burgage-tenure, a special kind of socage which (like tenure in petit serjeanty) seems, in spite of 12 Car. II. c. 24, to be still recognized by the law. (See supra, p. 20.) As a rule, however, these differences in descent and in other matters occasionally do not indicate a separate tenure, but are merely peculiar incidents attached by custom to land, subject otherwise to the general tenure of free socage.¹ Incidents of Free Tenure.—As between tenants in fee simple and the Crown, most of the incidents of free tenure were abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24. The most important now remaining is escheat, that is, the reverter to the Crown as lord paramount of land held by a tenant in fee simple under it. This now usually arises through the death of the tenant without heirs and without a will. (See infra, p. 259.)

As between tenants in fee simple and tenants holding under them in fee simple—a relationship now not often met with—besides escheat, a quit rent (which now is usually of small value owing to the change in the value of money, and which may, by sect. 45 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, be compulsorily redeemed by the tenant) socage relief of one year's quit rent payable on the death of the tenant and, if the land be parcel of a manor, rights of common on the waste of the manor are also usually incident. As between tenants in fee simple and tenants holding smaller interests under them there is no escheat, since the lord enters on the land as of his old estate on the determination, or end, of the smaller interest. What the other incidents of these smaller interests are, we shall see when we come to consider such interests.

¹ The difference between incidents arising from tenure and incidents attached by custom is this: the former change with the tenure, the latter do not—the maxim being that custom runs, not with the tenure, but with the land. Thus copyholds when enfranchised (see Appendix A.) become freeholds, and all the incidents peculiar to copyhold change simultaneously. But any peculiarity of descent attached to lands of a particular manor by local custom survives the change in tenure, and continues to regulate the descent of the freehold. (Rob. Gay. 80.)

Wherever there is tenure, fealty—i.e., an oath of loyalty to the lord—is incident; but it now is never demanded. Homage was abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Interests in Free Tenure.—Free tenure was, as we have seen, the tenure of freemen. As such, the conditions of the tenure had to be such as according to the notions of the time a freeman might honourably submit to. The services due under it could not be servile or menial in their nature, and interests given in it could not be held at the mere will and pleasure of the lord. The smallest interest that was considered suitable to the status of a freeman was an estate certain for life. This accordingly was and is the least interest that can be held in free tenure. Of course there was no objection to a freeman accepting a larger estate. Accordingly, grants not merely to continue during his own life, but to continue as long as he had heirs, could be made in free tenure. These latter were called estates in fee. Estates for life and estates in fee were at first the only interests that could be held in free tenure.

Estates in fee were of various kinds, of which the most important were estates in fee simple and estates in fee conditional. The latter were estates limited to continue as long as the original grantees had direct descendants to inherit them. On failure of descendants, they reverted to the grantor or his heirs. As long as fees were inalienable such estates ran their natural course; but when the right to alienate became one of their legal incidents, the reverter to the lord became liable to defeat. The Courts then held that a fee conditional was a fee the condition of which was the birth of heritable issue to the grantee, and that on the birth of a child who could inherit, this condition was fulfilled to such an extent, at any rate, as to enable the grantee to alienate the estate free from the condition, that is, to alienate it in fee simple, and also to make it forfeitable to the Crown on the tenant's conviction of treason. (Co. Litt. 19a.) The effect of such an alienation or forfeiture was to defeat the reverter to the lord for ever.

To prevent this extinguishment of a valuable right, the great lords passed the statute De Donis Conditionalibus (13 Edw. I., c. 1, A.D. 1285), so called from the words with which it begins. This enacted that the condition of the grant in the case of a conditional fee should henceforth be strictly observed. Conditional fees in land were on this held inalienable, and from being owners of the full fee subject to a condition, tenants in fee conditional now became practically only life tenants, with life estates to the heirs of their body in succession. With this change in their character, a change took place in the name given to conditional fees. Henceforth they were called not conditional fees, but fees in tail or fees tail (from tailler, to cut) in allusion to the fact that the full inheritance had been cut down into a mutilated or truncated one. (2 Bl. Com. 112.)

There were now—and there have continued ever since—three estates in land of free tenure; two at common law (fee simple and life estate), and one statutory (fee tail). These, when they are held in free tenure, are commonly called freehold interests.¹

¹ Precisely similar interests subsist in copyholds. (See Appendix A.)

SUB-SECTION 1.

FREEHOLD INTERESTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Heirs	26	(a.) Estates in Fee Simple.....	29
Kinds of Heirs	26	(b.) Estates in Fee Tail	37
Heritable Estates	27	(c.) Estates for Life	45
Words of Succession	28	A. Settlements of Freeholds..	55

Heirs.—Of freehold interests in land, two, as we have seen, are heritable interests, and one is not. Heritable interests are merely interests the duration or extent of which is marked out (or limited, as the technical expression is) by reference to the kind or class of heirs who may succeed to it in case nothing happens to prevent its descent to them. It is important, then, to ascertain what are the different kinds or classes of heirs recognized by law.

Kinds of Heirs.—The word “heirs,” when used in connection with the limitation of estates, is, roughly speaking, equivalent to blood relations. And heirs are divided according to their relationship to the person whose heirs they are. The primary division is between blood relations generally and descendants. The former are called “heirs” simply, or “heirs general,” the latter “heirs of the body.” Then heirs of the body are distinguished according as they are descendants generally, or descendants of a particular sex, or by a particular marriage. The first class are “heirs of the body general,” the second “heirs male or heirs female of the body,” the last “heirs of the body by his wife A.” or “by her husband B.,” or “heirs of their bodies begotten between them.” The last class, again, may be distinguished according to their sex. When heirs of the body are divided according to sex, those only are included who are not merely of that given sex, but who are also descended from the persons whose heirs of the body they are through that sex. (Litt. s. 24; Co. Litt. 25 a.)

Thus, heirs male of the body include only sons, the sons of sons, the sons of sons' sons, and so on. The son of a daughter is not the heir male of the body of his grandfather. It may be noted that the law does not permit heirs general to be divided according to sex, but only heirs of the body. (Litt. s. 31 ; Co. Litt. 27 a.)

All the kinds of relationship mentioned here must be legitimate relationship. Merely natural relationship is not recognized in law, at any rate for purposes of inheritance. That is why it is called natural (as opposed to legal) relationship. A bastard is in law nullius filius, the son of nobody. He has no relatives save his own descendants, and he can never claim as heir except as to them.¹

Another point may just be mentioned. When it is said the heirs or heirs in tail in a grant include the classes of relatives mentioned, it is not meant that if the estate is allowed to descend the class in question will take it among them. Who will take it—the heir-at-law he is called—will be ascertained on the death of the owner by means of the canons of descent. All that is meant is that the estate will not fail for want of heirs as long as any of that class exists, or at any rate can be ascertained to exist.

Heritable Estates.—Heritable estates or fees being estates limited to the grantees and their heirs, they are divided just as heirs are divided. The primary division is into fee simple estates, i. e., estates limited to the grantee and his heirs general (that is, without qualification), and fee tail estates, i. e., estates limited to a man and the heirs of his body. Again, there are as many kinds of fee tail estates as there are kinds of heirs of the body. There are estates in tail general—"to A. and the heirs of his body"; in tail male—"to A. and the heirs male of his body"; in tail female—"to A. and the heirs female of his body";¹ in tail special—"to A. and the heirs of his body by his wife B.," or "to A. and his wife B. and the heirs of their bodies between them begotten"; in male tail special—"to A. and the heirs male of his body by his wife B. "; and in female tail special—"to A. and the heirs female of his body by his wife B.," &c.

¹ Under the old law of descent a bastard could not be heir even of own issue, as the rule then was that inheritances could not ascend lineally. This was altered by the Inheritance Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, s. 6).

Words of Succession.—These words "heirs" and "heirs of the body" are the apt words for granting an estate of inheritance to an individual, and formerly in grants by deed, though not in gifts by will, an estate of inheritance could not be created without them. To this day a grant by deed to A. without more will give A. only a life estate. But by section 51 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), as we shall see later on, the words "heirs" or "heirs of the body" are no longer absolutely necessary provided the estate intended to be conveyed is otherwise adequately described. (See infra, p. 360.)

In grants in spiritual tenure a fee simple can be conveyed without words of inheritance, and such is the case in grants to corporations aggregate in all cases. (See Part VII.) But in grants to corporations sole the words "his successors" must take the place of "his heirs," save in the case of grants to the sovereign, when no words of succession are necessary. (2 Bl. Com. 108.)

¹ Limitations in tail female are for obvious reasons so rare in practice that some very learned writers have doubted whether they are legal. (See Co. Litt. 25a, note 1.) But this doubt seems to be unfounded. (See per Lord Blackburn, Earl of Zetland v. Lord Advocate, 3 App. Cas. 505, at p. 523.)

(a.) Estates in Fee Simple.

	PAGE		PAGE
Estates in Fee Simple	29	Lordship over Fees Simple ..	31
No Reversion on Fees Simple..	29	Fee Farm Grants	32
Determinable Fees	30	Fee Farm Grants in Ireland..	33
Determinable Fees and Sub-		Alienation of Fees Simple....	34
sequent Limitations	30	Liability for Debts	35

Estates in Fee Simple.—An estate in fee simple is the largest interest in land which can be owned by any ordinary person. When it is in possession, that is, when there is no smaller freehold interest preceding it, or when its owner is not deprived of the use of the land by the subsistence therein of a chattel interest in possession belonging to somebody else, it amounts, for all practical purposes, to absolute ownership. (See supra, p. 2.) Its owner can use the land as he likes, and dispose of the right to use it as he likes, and the right is unlimited in duration; or, in the ordinary phrase, the owner holds the land “to himself, his heirs and assigns for ever.” The only limitation of the ownership lies usually in the lordship residing in the Crown, which, as we have already seen, is now of a very shadowy and unsubstantial character.

No Reversion on Fees Simple.—Though other smaller freehold interests may precede an estate in fee simple no interest of any kind can at common law follow it. (Willion v. Berkeley, Plowd. 223.) In other words, there can be no reversion on a fee simple. This characteristic results from a fee simple estate being regarded by the law as an estate to last for ever, and it is a characteristic peculiar to fees simple. All other interests in land, freehold, or chattel, are in their nature terminable, and therefore any number of them cannot absorb the full ownership, which is everlasting, at any rate, in contemplation of law. Accordingly, however many smaller estates may be limited in a parcel of land, there must still be a reversion over and above them all, and that reversion must be a fee simple, which is the only estate which is everlasting, and which is able, therefore, to absorb the whole ownership.

Of. Can subject grant this kind of an estate or is it only the Crown. has about subinfeudation

Determinable Fees.—It seems, however, possible to qualify fees simple, so that while there is no reversion on them—that is, no estate to follow them—there may, nevertheless, be a possibility of reverter—that is, a chance of their returning to the grantor. Thus, an estate might be granted to “A. and his heirs, lords of the Manor of Dale.” (Co. Litt. 27 a; 2 Bl. Com. 109.) Here the limitation to “A. and his heirs” creates a fee simple. The collateral limitation, “lords of the Manor of Dale,” restricts the enjoyment of the grant by A. and his heirs to the period they continue to be lords of that manor. When they cease to be such lords, the fee simple determines, and the lands revert to the grantor. This is usually called a fee determinable. Here the owner has all the rights of an owner in fee simple absolute. He can use the land as he likes, and dispose of it as he likes, subject always to the condition that it shall determine on his or his heirs ceasing to be lords of the Manor of Dale—an event which, of course, may never happen.

Determinable Fees and subsequent Limitations.—A fee simple, whether absolute or determinable, exhausts the whole ownership in the land. Nevertheless, in the case of a determinable fee granted by will or by way of use, where the determining event, if it occur at all, must, by the terms of the grant, occur during the continuance of a life or lives in being, or within twenty-one years after the dropping of these lives (and these are the only kind of determinable fees now met with in practice: see Part III.), the estate, instead of reverting to the grantor, may be made to shift over to another grantee. (See infra, p. 145.) This limitation, however, is contrary to the rules of common law, and, as we shall see, is based on the practice of the Court of Chancery.

The event which is to determine a determinable fee must be an event which may never happen. If it be an event which must happen some time or other, then the estate is not one which, in contemplation of law, can last for ever, and, therefore, it cannot be a fee simple of any sort.¹

Lordship over Fees Simple.—No reversion, as we have seen, can subsist over an estate in fee simple, neither, as a rule, can any lordship save that residing in the Crown. At one time this was different. When fees simple first became alienable, the rule was that if a tenant by a single conveyance transferred all the lands he held under any grant, the transfer might so operate that the new tenant held the lands from the lord of whom the old tenant held, and on the same services as the old tenant; but if he transferred part of the land only, or transferred it all in parcels, then the new tenant or tenants must have held not of the lord but of the old tenant, who himself became a mesne lord between them and the original grantor. This arose from the doctrine that services reserved on a grant could not be divided. This practice of subinfeudation, as it was called, worked, in some way or other not very clear now—since the superior lord could distrain on the whole land for his services (2 Inst. 65)—to the prejudice of the superior lord, and, in consequence, after some ineffectual attempts to check it (see 9 Hen. III. c. 32), a statute was passed to stop it.

¹ It may be well to point out the difference between a determinable and a base fee. A determinable fee is (as appears above) a fee descendible to the heirs general on which there is no reversion, but merely a possibility of reverter. (Plow. 557.) A base fee is a fee descendible to the heirs general on which there is a reversion in fee simple. Determinable fee arises by original limitation. Base fees arise through the transfer of estates in fee tail. (See p. 38, infra.) For a list of base fees, see Challis on Real Property, Chap. 22. Blackstone uses the term base fee to describe what is called above a fee determinable. (2 Bl. Com. 108.)

This statute was called Quia Emptores (18 Ed. I. c. 1, A.D. 1290), so called, like the statute De Donis Conditionalibus, from the words with which it begins. It enacted that while every tenant in fee simple might freely alienate his land in fee simple, either in whole or in part, yet the new tenant or tenants should not hold of him as their lord, but from his lord by the same services by which he had held, which services, where the land was alienated partially or in parcels, were to be divided. This has continued the law ever since, and, consequently, any private lordship over lands in fee simple now subsisting must have been created either before the passing of this statute (A.D. 1290) or under some royal charter affirmed by act of parliament granted since that date. (Delacherois v. Delacherois, 11 H. L. C. 62.)¹ In the absence of evidence to prove a private lordship—which evidence is rarely forthcoming now—the lordship is presumed to reside in the Crown. (Doe v. Redfern, 12 East. 96.)

Fee Farm Grants.—The relation of lord and tenant is what is meant by tenure. The effect, therefore, of the statute Quia Emptores was to abolish henceforth tenure as between the grantor and grantee of estates in fee simple. Rent is an incident of tenure—a service resulting from the relation of lord and tenant. Accordingly, after the statute Quia Emptores, no rent properly so called, that is, rent service, for which the common law gave a right to distrain on the land subject to it, could be reserved by the grantor on a grant in fee simple. When a rent was reserved it was only a rent seek, or dry rent, so called because the common law gave no remedy for recovering it. To secure its payment a power of distress had to be specially given to the owner in the instrument reserving the rent. When such a power was given the rent was called not a rent seek, but a rent charge.

¹ It is doubtful whether the Crown cannot grant by charter without the sanction of Parliament, authority to a subject to create a manor or private lordship. (See Co. Litt. 98 b.)

As grants in fee simple, in which part of the consideration—or payment—for the land took the form of a rent reserved to the grantor, became more usual, this state of the law caused inconvenience, and in George II.'s time an act (4 Geo. II. c. 28) was passed making a power of distress incident to a rent seek. And now, by sect. 44 of the Conveyancing Act of 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), as far as rents reserved after 1st January, 1882, are concerned, the owner or grantee of a rent has the following remedies against the land subject to it: (a) distress, if unpaid for twenty-one days after becoming due; (b) entry and possession till payment of arrears, if unpaid for forty days; (c) power of demise to a trustee by way of mortgage, sale, or demise for raising and payment of sum due and costs, if unpaid for forty days.

Grants in fee simple with a rent reserved to the grantor are now called fee farm grants. They are very common in Manchester and throughout Lancashire, where they constitute the favourite form of building lease.

Fee Farm Grants in Ireland.—Fee farm grants are also very common in Ireland, but there their whole nature has been changed by two acts passed during her present Majesty's reign.

Under the Renewable Leaseholds Conversion Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 105), leases for lives renewable for ever may, on the motion of either party to them, be changed into fee farm grants, the mines, timbers, &c., being, by sect. 4, reserved to the landlord. By sect. 20, the fee farm rent arising on conversions under the act, or on grants in fee farm after the passing of the act (1st August, 1849), shall be recoverable by distress, ejectment, and all other ways by which rent service reserved on any common lease or demise for a life or for lives is or may be by law recoverable.

By the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1860 (commonly called Deasy's Act—23 & 24 Vict. c. 154), it is enacted

(sect. 3) that the relation of landlord and tenant shall be deemed to be founded on contract and not on tenure or service, and that a reversion shall not be necessary to support it; it exists in all cases where there is an agreement by one party to hold land from or under another, the consideration being any rent. Consequently, a fee farm grant made after 1st January, 1861, when the act came into operation, or made under the Renewable Leaseholds Act, 1849, now creates the relationship of landlord and tenant, which carries with it the ordinary remedies of distress, ejectment, &c. But by sect. 25, the tenant under such a grant is not impeachable for waste, except fraudulent or malicious waste. (See p. 50, infra.) Grants made under the Renewable Leaseholds Act, or renewals after 1861 in pursuance of covenants for renewal in leases made before that date, are, however, excluded from this section. The tenant in fee farm has, like the tenant in fee simple, a power of free alienation, and any covenant in a fee farm grant restraining alienation is void as being "repugnant to the nature of the estate." (Lunham's Estate, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 170.)

Sect. 3 of Deasy's Act is not retrospective; so in grants in fee farm made before 1862, and not made under the Renewable Leaseholds Act, the relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist. As to them the law in Ireland is the same as the law as to fee farm grants in England. (Chute v. Busteed, 16 Ir. C. L. R. 222.)

Alienation of Fees Simple.—This power or right of voluntary and free alienation inter vivos has, ever since the statute Quia Emptores, been an inseparable incident of an estate in fee simple. The right of alienation by will was, as we shall see, first recognized by statutes in Henry VIII.'s reign (32 Hen. VIII. c. 1, and 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 5; see p. 226, infra), and fully acquired through the Act for the Abolition of Military Tenures already referred to (12 Car. II. c. 24).

Liability of Fees Simple for Debts.—The liability of a fee simple estate to be taken from its owner and used for the payment of his debts did not attach fully to fees simple till a comparatively recent date.

The estate was, so early as Edward I.'s time, made partially liable for its owner's debts for which judgment had been obtained during his lifetime. By the Statute of Westminster the Second (13 Edw. I. c. 18), as it was called, a creditor could, under a writ of elegit, obtain possession of a half of the debtor's lands, and could retain them till the judgment debt was paid, or was realized out of the rents and profits. The statute applied only to judgments of the Courts of Common Law, as opposed to Courts of Equity; but now, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, the writ of elegit is extended to all the debtor's lands and to all judgments of the Supreme Court. Judgments of inferior courts, to be made effectual against land, must be removed to the Supreme Court. Formerly, judgments attached as an incumbrance upon lands; but now, by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 1, no judgment entered after the passing of that act—29th July, 1864—is to affect land until it is actually delivered in execution by virtue of a writ or other lawful authority; and by sect. 5 of the Land Charges Registration and Searches Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 51), every writ or order affecting land is, upon its issue, to be registered at the Office of Land Registry in the name of the person whose land is affected by it, which registration is to lapse if not renewed every five years. And by sect. 6 of the same act, every such writ or order, and every delivery in execution or other proceedings taken in pursuance of any such writ or order or in obedience thereto, shall be void as against a purchaser for value of the land, unless the writ or order is, for the time being, registered under sect. 5. By the Judgments Extension Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 54), judgments obtained in the Supreme Court, and in the superior Courts in Ireland and Scotland, are made respectively effectual in other parts of the United Kingdom.

If, however, judgment was not recovered during the debtor's life, then, until recently, his fee simple estates were liable in the hands of his heir or devisee only for debts due to the Crown, and debts due to private persons by bond, in which the heirs were expressly bound. These latter were called specialty debts, and the land liable to them was called legal assets for their payment. If the debtor devised his land for the payment of his debts it was called equitable assets, and was divided equally between all his creditors. After various modifications of this rule, at last, by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, land was made assets for the payment of all the debts of a deceased owner, though specialty debts were still to be paid before ordinary debts. By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, the priority of specialty creditors is abolished as to all persons dying on or after 1st January, 1870. Then, by the Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 10, in the administration by the Court of the assets of any person who may die after the commencement of the act, and whose estate may prove to be insufficient for the payment in full of his debts and liabilities, the same rules are to prevail as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors, and as to debts and liabilities provable, as may be in force for the time being under the law of bankruptcy with respect to the estates of persons adjudged bankrupt. (In re Leng, Tarn v. Emmerson, (1895) 1 Ch. 652.) And now, by sect. 2 (3) of the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), in the administration of the assets of a person dying after the commencement of that act (1st January, 1898), his real estate shall be administered in the same manner, subject to the same liabilities for debt, costs and expenses, and with the same incidents, as if it were personal estate.

(b.) Estates in Fee Tail.

	PAGE		PAGE
Estates in Fee Tail.....	37	An Unbarrable Fee Tail	42
Alienation of Fees Tail by		Liability of Fees Tail for Debts	43
Action	38	Fees Tail not Divisible	44
Alienation of Fees Tail by		Tenant in Tail's Leasing
Deed	39	Powers	44
Operation of Disentailing Deed	40	Position of Tenant in Tail....	44

Estates in Fee Tail.—Estates in fee tail, as we have seen, arose out of the old conditional fees. (Supra, p. 25.) The object of the statute De Donis Conditionalibus was simply to save the lord's chance of getting back the land by compelling the estate to run its natural course. The effect was, however, much more extensive. In the first place, by making the estate necessarily come to an end on failure of the heirs of the body of the grantee, the statute, as the Courts held, had reduced it to a smaller estate than the old conditional fee, which was merely a fee simple subject to a condition. Accordingly, instead of a possibility of reverter, which was all that remained in the grantor after granting a conditional fee (Marquis of Westminster's Case, 3 Rep. at p. 36), there remained in the grantor of a fee tail a reversion in fee simple which could be limited out in estates to come into enjoyment on the determination of the fee tail.¹ In the second place, by making it impossible for the grantee to bar his issue as it is called—that is, to prevent the heir of his body from becoming entitled to claim the estate on his death—the statute practically changed the grantee's interest from a fee into a life estate.¹ It is true, if a tenant in tail alienated his estate, the grantee did not take merely a life interest: he took a base fee—that is, an estate to him and his heirs which must determine when the heirs of the body of the tenant in tail failed. But that base fee could, at any time after the decease of the tenant in tail, be put an end to by the entry of the heir of the body of the deceased tenant in tail, i.e., by the heir in tail taking or obtaining by an action possession of the land. And although, as we shall see, the tenant in tail can, by observing certain forms, now bar his issue and also the reversion of the grantor, yet if these forms are not observed his conveyance will still only transfer a base fee determinable after his decease by entry of his heir of the body.

¹ The statute De Donis applies only to tenements. Accordingly, limitations to the grantee and the heirs of his body of hereditaments which are not tenements—such as annuities not connected with land—create conditional fees still. And similar limitations of copyholds in manors where there is no custom to entail, also do so. In both these cases the grantee, on the birth of heritable issue, is entitled to convey his interest in fee simple. And there is no reversion, but merely a possibility of reverter in the grantor. (See infra, p. 300.)

Alienation of Fees Tail by Action.—The statute De Donis Conditionalibus having produced results not anticipated, and not desirable, many attempts were made in parliament to repeal it, but these all failed through the opposition of the great lords. What, however, parliament would not sanction, the Courts accomplished by means of collusive actions. These were of two kinds. The minor kind was what was called a fine levied with proclamations—a proceeding expressly recognized by parliament in the Statutes of Fines (4 Hen. VII. c. 24, and 32 Hen. VIII. c. 36). This was a collusive action, which was settled with the consent of the Court in favour of the demandant,² who was the grantee to whom the estate was to be transferred. The second and more effectual kind was what was called a common recovery. This was a collusive action carried fully through with judgment for the demandant.

¹ An estate in fee tail was not liable to forfeiture on the conviction of the tenant in tail of treason, being in this respect different again from the old conditional fee which was liable to forfeiture as soon as the tenant had issue born who could inherit. (See supra, p. 25.) Fees tail were made liable to forfeiture for treason by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 13.

² In real actions the proper description of the parties was demandant and tenant. Real actions are now abolished, and so the terms plaintiff and defendant, which formerly applied to parties in personal actions only, apply in all common law actions.

The old learning with regard to fines and recoveries is not of sufficient importance now to justify its introduction in an elementary work. It will be sufficient for our purposes to point out two differences between the two processes, as these constitute the basis of the law at present. In the first place, a fine could be levied by any tenant in tail whether his estate was in possession or in remainder, that is, was preceded by another freehold interest. A recovery, on the other hand, could be suffered only either by a tenant in tail in possession, or by a tenant in tail in remainder with the consent of the owner of the preceding freehold. Secondly, a fine barred only the issue of the tenant in tail who levied it, creating therefore merely a base fee. A recovery, on the other hand, barred not only the issue of the tenant in tail who suffered it, but also all other interests in reversion to the estate tail, creating therefore a fee simple. But neither a fine nor a recovery barred the reversion when that was in the Crown (as to fines, 32 Hen. VIII. c. 36, s. 36; as to recoveries, 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 20), where the estate tail was granted by the Crown for services rendered to it. (Perkins v. Sewell, 1 Bla. 654.)

The legality of alienation by common recovery seems to have been first judicially admitted in Taltarum's case, A.D. 1473 (M. 12 Ed. IV. pl. 25 f., 19a). In Mary Portington's case (10 Rep. 35) it was held that a condition of forfeiture of an estate tail upon the tenant's doing or concurring in any proceeding to break the entail was bad. Since then the liability to be barred has always been considered to be an inseparable incident of estates in fee tail.

Alienation of Fees Tail by Deed.—The whole system of fines and recoveries was swept away in 1833 by the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries. (3 & 4 Will. IV.

c. 74; Irish Act, 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 92.) Under that statute a fee tail, "whether in possession, remainder, contingency or otherwise," can be alienated by a deed executed by the tenant in tail and enrolled within six months of its execution (sect. 4; Irish Act, sect. 12) in the Central Office of the High Court of Justice. (R. S. C., Ord. LXI., r. 9.) This disentailing assurance is simply an ordinary deed of grant (see pp. 206, 359, infra), except that it declares the grant to be made "discharged from all estates in tail of the grantor at law or in equity." (See Key & Elphinstone, I., p. 687, 4th Ed.) It may be noted that if the assurance fails to take effect, as, for instance, by the grantee (where the grant is to his own use) disclaiming, i.e., declining to accept the estate, the assurance is void, and the fee tail remains unaffected by it. (Peacock v. Eastland, L. R. 10 Eq. 17.) And further, the statute applies only to deeds actually executed, not to contracts to execute deeds. Accordingly if a tenant in tail contracts to disentail and sell his land, and dies before the deed is executed, the contract becomes void. (Bankes v. Small, 36 Ch. D. 716.)

When the tenant in tail does not wish to sell the settled lands, but wants merely to change his estate in them from a fee tail into a fee simple, he grants the lands to another person and his heirs "discharged from all estates in tail of the grantor in law or equity" to the use of the grantor and his heirs. The effect of such a conveyance is, as we shall see (see p. 140), that the grantee takes no estate in the lands granted, but merely acts as a medium or "conduit pipe" to return them to the grantor in fee simple.

Operation of Disentailing Deeds.—Two differences have been pointed out between fines and recoveries. (Supra, p. 39.) Both of these are substantially embodied in the new law as to disentailing deeds. Under it, a tenant in tail in possession, or a tenant in tail not in possession but entitled to the reversion or remainder expectant on his fee tail, can, at his own will, bar both his issue and all succeeding interests, and so turn his estate into a fee simple. (Sect. 34.) On the other hand, a tenant in tail neither in possession nor entitled to the reversion on his fee tail can, at his own will, bar only his own issue, and so create a base fee, i.e., a fee to the grantee and his heirs general, which will determine as soon as the grantor and the heirs of his body fail. If he desires to turn his estate into a fee simple, he must obtain the consent of the "protector of the settlement." (Sects. 40, 42.) The office of protector of the settlement may be vested in any number of persons not exceeding three appointed to be protectors by the instrument creating the estate tail. If two or more persons are so appointed, then on the death of one the office survives to the other or others. (Bell v. Holtby, L. R. 15 Eq. 179.) If no protector be appointed by the instrument, then the office belongs to the owner of the first estate of freehold in possession in the land under the same settlement as the fee tail, provided that the owner is not merely a tenant holding at a rent, or a trustee or a tenant in dower, or is not expressly excluded by the grantor. (Sect. 22.)¹ In the last case, if no protector is appointed, and in all cases if the protector is convicted of treason or felony, or cannot be ascertained, the Court of Chancery is protector; or if the protector is a lunatic, the Court in lunacy acts in his stead. (Sect. 33.) If a protector or protectors are appointed, but die or disclaim the office, the owner of the first freehold in possession becomes protector. (Sect. 32.)

As we have seen, a tenant in tail who alienates without observing the requirements of the statute, as, for instance, if he does not enrol the disentailing assurance within six months of its execution (sect. 41), and a tenant in tail who alienates even observing such requirements, but without the consent of the protector, where the consent of the protector is made necessary to bar the remainder, conveys only a base fee in the settled lands. This base fee, however, will, in the first case, become a fee simple, if the grantee of it is or becomes the owner of the reversion in fee simple immediately following the base fee, and in the latter case, the base fee can subsequently be enlarged into a fee simple by the original tenant in tail with the consent of the protector (sects. 35 and 39), or, if the tenant in tail be bankrupt, by the judge in bankruptcy with similar consent if there be any protector. (See Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 56 (5).) And by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), sect. 6, when a person is in possession of a base fee for twelve years after the original tenant in tail might have barred the remainders without the consent of anyone, the base fee is to become a fee simple.

¹ When the legal estate is held in trust, the cestui que trust of the first equitable freehold is protector. (In re Hudson's Contract, 8 Ch. D. 628.)

Finally, the provisions by which a tenant in tail was prohibited from barring the reversion by fine or recovery when the estate tail had been granted by the Crown for services to it, and the reversion was in the Crown, apply equally to barring by a deed under the Act. (Sect. 18.)

An Unbarrable Fee Tail.—When land is conveyed in special tail on the death without issue of the party on whose body the heirs were to be begotten, all possibility of issue capable of inheriting the estate is gone.¹ The tenant in tail then is called “tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct," or more shortly, "tenant in tail after possibility," and such a tenant in tail is unable to bar the entail. (Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, s. 18.) He is regarded for most purposes merely as a tenant for life, save that he is not liable for waste. (See Williams v. Williams, 15 Ves. 419, and p. 50, infra.) It would seem, however, that when he commits waste by cutting down timber, the property in the timber so cut down is not in him, but in the first person entitled to an estate of inheritance in the land. (2 Bl. Com. 125.) And if he assigns his estate his assignee is merely a tenant pur autre vie and liable for waste. (Co. Litt. 28a, infra, p. 48.)

¹ Ex. gr., limitations to A. and the heirs of his body by his wife B. B. dies without having any children by A: Obviously A. cannot have issue capable of inheriting under the limitation. But nothing except the death of the person on whose body the heirs were to be begotten, can create a tenancy in tail after possibility of issue. A divorce, for instance, would, it seems, merely make a tenant in special tail an ordinary life tenant. (2 Bl. 125; Co. Litt. 28a.) And the great age of either of the parties could not affect the nature of the estate of the tenant in special tail, since the law fixes no limit of age when a person—male or female—is presumed to be incapable of having issue.

Liability of Fees Tail for Debts.—During the life of the owner estates in fee tail can be taken under a writ of elegit for debts or damages for which judgment against him has been recovered; and if he becomes bankrupt, his trustee in bankruptcy can bar the entail for the benefit of the bankrupt's creditors. (Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 56, sub-s. 5 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52).)

On the death of the owner, however, the fee tail, unlike a fee simple, is not assets by descent in the hands of the heir of the body. Formerly, indeed, it was liable for none of its former owner's debts, save such as were owing to the Crown. (This liability arose under 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39, s. 75.) Now, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 11, 13, 18, and 19, it is also liable, both as against the heir of the body and the remainderman, for all debts of the deceased owner for which judgment, decree, order, or rule exists, though by a later statute (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, ss. 1 and 2) such judgment, decree, order, or rule is not to affect any land until the land has been actually delivered in execution by virtue of a writ of elegit or other lawful authority. (See supra, p. 35.) As to debts, however, which are neither Crown debts nor judgment debts on which execution has actually been issued and the land seized in execution (or extended, as the phrase is), the old rule prevails, that a fee tail, though during the life of the owner an estate of inheritance, yet, on his death, is regarded as a life estate with remainder to the heir of his body. Accordingly, it is not liable for the debts of the deceased owner in the hands of the heir of the body.

Fees Tail not devisable.—Although a tenant in tail is able during life to bar his own issue or even to turn his estate into a fee simple, he can do neither of these by his will. If at the time of his death the estate is still an estate in tail, it will descend to the heir of his body independent of any disposition of it made in his will. Neither can he by his will charge it with the payment of any particular debt or with his debts generally. His will in short, cannot in any way affect the right of the heir of the body to the estate which, on his ancestor's death, becomes vested in him immediately.

Tenant in Tail's Leasing Powers.—At common law, all leases granted by a tenant in tail, for whatever term they might be expressed to be, failed or became voidable on the death of the tenant in tail. Powers of granting leases for a limited number of years which would be good against the tenant in tail's issue, and afterwards, as against both his issue and the reversioner, were given by statute. And now all tenants in tail in possession (which includes tenants after possibility) are, for the purposes of the acts, to be considered tenants for life within the Settled Land Acts, 1882—1890 (see infra, p. 58), and to possess all the powers of leasing therein given to the tenant for life.

Position of Tenant in Tail.—The position of the tenant in tail may then be summed up thus:—

- (a) During his life he cannot alienate the estate or bar the entail, except by a certain formal proceeding prescribed by the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74):

- (b) He cannot, by his will, devise his estate :
- (c) During his life his estate is liable for his debts
(1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 11, 13, 18, 19) :
- (d) On his death his estate descends to the heir of his body free from all his debts, save those due to the Crown (33 Hen. VIII. c. 39, s. 75), and those for which judgment has been given, and the lands actually taken in execution of the judgment (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112) :
- (e) For purposes of sale, leasing, &c., he has all the powers of a life tenant under the Settled Land Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 58, sub-s. 1 (i).

Subject to the limitations here indicated, the tenant in tail in possession is practically complete owner of the land.
He can use the land as he likes without liability to anyone.
He can pull down any houses or other buildings upon it ;
he can cut any timber or ornamental trees growing on it ;
he can take any minerals in it—in short, he can commit whatever waste he chooses. (See infra, p. 50.)

(c.) Estates for Life.

	PAGE		PAGE
Estates for Life	45	Incidents of Life Estates	50
Origin of Life Estates	46	Waste	50
Kinds of Life Estates.....	47	Emblements.....	53.
Estates pur autre vie	48	Alienation	54
		Leases and Estates for Life ..	54

Estates for Life.—The third and non-heritable kind of freehold interests is, as we have seen, estates for life or for lives. (For brevity we will speak of them throughout as estates for life or life estates.) An estate for life is simply an estate which is to continue until the death of some person or some one of several persons. A condition may be attached to it which may, in the result, determine it before the death of the person in question. It is then called "an estate for life determinable." (Co. Litt. 42 a.) The event which is to determine it must be one which, at the inception of the estate, was not certain to happen within any given time. If it is an event which is sure to happen at or before some fixed time, although, in the result, it may not be before the death of the person for whose life the estate is held, then the estate subject to it is not an estate of freehold. Thus, a grant to a widow during her widowhood is a good life estate. Though the marriage of the widow will determine the estate before her death, yet it is not certain that she will ever remarry. But a grant for a hundred years, if the grantee shall so long live, is merely an estate for years liable to determine on the death of the grantee. The event here—the elapse of the hundred years—is certain to happen, and so a period is fixed beyond which the estate cannot extend. This is inconsistent with the nature of a freehold interest. It may be improbable that the person for whose life the estate is held may live a hundred years, but the law takes no account of probabilities or improbabilities in this connection. Besides, in law, no limit is fixed for the possible duration of human life.

Origin of Life Estates.—Estates for life may arise either by direct limitation or by operation of law.¹ Direct limitation may be either express or implied. Thus, a limitation "to A. for his life," "to B. for the life of A.," "to C. for the joint lives of B. and A.," or "to D. for the life of C., B., or A., whichever may last longest," is express. On the other hand, a limitation in a deed—it is otherwise in a will (see p. 242)—"to A." without more is an implied limitation to A. for his own life. And a limitation to "A. for the term of life"—without mentioning whose life—is an implied limitation to A. for his own life, provided the grantor can grant such an estate (an estate for the life of the grantee being esteemed the best kind of life estate);¹ but if the grantor cannot grant an estate for the grantee's life, then it is an estate for the grantor's life if he can grant that. The latter would be the case if the grantor himself were only a life tenant.

¹ Blackstone calls those arising by direct limitation conventional, and those arising by implication, legal estates.

Life estates arising by operation of law are such estates as estates by the curtesy (infra, p. 262), estates in dower (infra, p. 263), and the life estate which descends to an heir-at-law when by the will of his ancestor land in fee simple is devised to some one from the death of the heir-at-law or another, and the immediate freehold is undisposed of by the will, ex. gr., "to A. in fee simple from the death of my eldest son, B."; here, if no gift is made of the land during B.'s life, B. takes it as heir to the testator.

Kinds of Life Estates.—Life estates are primarily divided according as the life for which they are held is the life of the grantee or the life of some one else. If they are held for the life of the grantee they are ordinary life estates; if they are held for the life of some one else they are estates pur autre vie. Sometimes an estate may belong in a way to both classes. Thus, a grantee may hold an estate for his own life and the life of another, or whichever may last determine. Here, as long as both the grantee and the other person live, the nature of the estate is indeterminate. On the death of the grantee first it becomes an estate pur autre vie. On the death of the other person first the estate becomes an ordinary life estate. The person for whose life an estate pur autre vie is held is called the cestui que vie.

¹ The general rule as to grants is that the grant should be construed most strongly against the grantor, save the grantor is the king. (2 Bl. 121.) This rule, however, has never been applied to grants of freehold where no estate is expressly limited, otherwise a grant to A. simpliciter would carry all the estate the grantor was entitled to convey. By sect. 28 of the Wills Act (see infra, p. 242), such words in a will have now that operation.

Estates pur autre vie.—Estates pur autre vie (which, as we have seen, may be for the life of another person than the owner, or for the joint lives of several other persons, or for the life of the survivor of several other persons) arise either by express limitation, or by the alienation of his life estate by an ordinary tenant for life, in which case the new tenant holds for the life of the old one. They differ from ordinary life estates chiefly in this, that they may survive the tenant. This, as life estates are not hereditary, used to lead to a peculiar state of things. Whether on the death of the tenant before the cestui que vie the estate had an owner at all or not depended on how the estate was limited. If it were limited to the tenant and his heirs, the heir entered not as heir (Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. 425), but as special occupant, that is, as the person to whom the estate was given after his ancestor. If it were limited to the tenant simply, then it was regarded as res nullius, and the first person who entered upon it after the deceased tenant's death was entitled to hold it as general occupant, or, if anyone was in actual occupation of it, it vested in him. In neither case was it liable for the deceased tenant's debts. (Doe v. Lurton, 6 T. R. 289, at p. 291.) To make it liable for the payment of his debts, and at the same time to do away with any uncertainty as to whom it should go to on the owner's decease, the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 12; Irish Act, 7 Will. III. c. 13) provided that it should be subject to the deceased tenant's will, and liable as if it were fee simple for his debts, and if the tenant died intestate as to it, and there was no special occupant, it should go as assets to the tenant's executors or administrators. A later statute (14 Geo. II. c. 20, s. 9) further enacted that executors or administrators should apply pur autre vie estates coming to them under the Statute of Frauds as if they were personalty. (See Part IV.) These enactments are both repealed and re-enacted by the Wills Act (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26, ss. 2, 3, and 6), and extended to pur autre vie estates in copyholds, and incorporeal hereditaments.

Estates pur autre vie may in a manner be entailed, that is, they may be limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body. When so limited, the heirs of the body will take as special occupants in succession during the continuance of the estate pur autre vie. This is called a quasi-entail. It appears that these quasi-entails can be barred, save as to quasi-remainders on them by will. (Dillon v. Dillon, 1 Ball & B. 77.) A tenant in quasi-entail in possession can, by ordinary deed without enrolment, bar both issue and quasi-remainders, but if he be not in possession he can bar the quasi-remainders only with the assent of the tenant in possession. (Allen v. Allen, 2 Dr. & War. 307, 324, and 332.)

As the existence of an estate pur autre vie depends upon the life of the cestui que vie, it is important to the person entitled to the land on the determination of the estate pur autre vie, that he should be able to prevent any concealment of the death of the cestui que vie. To enable him to do this it is provided by 6 Anne, c. 18, that once in every year on affidavit by the person next entitled after an estate pur autre vie that he has reason to believe the cestui que vie is dead, and that his death is concealed, the Chancellor shall order the production of the cestui que vie, and if this order be not complied with the cestui que vie will be taken as dead, and the person next entitled may enter and take the profits of the land until the cestui que vie be actually shown to be living. Moreover, any tenant pur autre vie holding over after the determination of his estate without the express consent of the person next entitled, is declared to be a trespasser. (Sect. 5.) This act applies not merely to strict estates pur autre vie, but to all interests determinable on death whether, strictly speaking, estates pur autre vie or not. (In re Stevens, 31 Ch. D. 320; and In re Pople, 40 Ch. D. 589.)

Incidents of Life Tenancy.—In practice the incidents of life tenancies are usually regulated by the terms of the instruments creating the estate. This being so, they vary of course with the views of the grantors. But occasionally the instrument creating a life tenancy is silent as to incidents. In that case they are settled by the general law. Shortly, these legal incidents are liability for waste, right to emblements and subjection to alienation, voluntary and involuntary.

Waste.—By the general law a tenant for life is, roughly speaking, entitled to use the demised land in any way he likes provided he does nothing which will injure the inheritance, that is, will make the land less valuable to those entitled after him. If he does anything injurious to the inheritance he is guilty of voluntary or “wilful” (Lord Castlemaine v. Lord Craven, 22 Vin. Ab. 523, tit. Waste) waste, and the Court will on the application of anyone interested in the reversion or remainder restrain him by injunction from continuing to do such acts and grant damages against him, or if he be dead, against his estate for the waste already committed. (Woodhouse v. Walker, 5 Q. B. D. 404.)

The chief acts which are held to be injurious to the inheritance and therefore acts of waste are :—

- (a) Pulling down buildings on the land (Vane v. Lord Barnard, commonly called the Raby Castle case, 2 Vern. 738), or even erecting new buildings on it which will change the nature of the property, ex. gr., building houses on agricultural land. (Brooke v. Karanagh, 23 L. R., Ir. 97.)

Where, however, the new buildings erected or other acts done to the land are such as improve the inheritance, the Court will not interfere. (Doherty

v. Allman, 3 App. Cas. 709; Meux v. Cobley, (1892) 2 Ch. 253.) This latter is sometimes called meliorating waste.

- (b) Breaking up ancient meadow land, destroying hedges, removing drains or otherwise altering injuriously the character of the land.
- (c) Opening mines and raising minerals on the land.

Mines open when the estate for life was created may be worked without committing waste, provided they are worked for the same purposes only as those for which they previously were worked. (Elias v. Snowdon Slate Quarries Co., 4 App. Cas. 454.)

- (d) Cutting down timber growing on the land.

What is timber depends on the general law and on local custom. By the general law oak, ash, and elm are timber provided they are at least twenty years old, and are not so old as to be rotten. By local custom other trees besides—such as beech—may be made timber, and at the same time the test as to when a tree becomes timber may be varied. Thus, for example, an oak by local custom may not be timber until it is twenty-four years old, or until it has a girth of a given measurement. Besides timber, a tenant for life cannot cut ornamental trees which are not timber, stools of undergrowth, trees planted to protect banks or timber trees under age unless for purposes of management. (Honywood v. Honwood, L. R. 18 Eq. 306.)

This rule as to cutting timber is subject to two exceptions. In the first place a tenant for life is entitled to estovers (from estoffer, to furnish : 2 Bl. Com. 35)—that is, he is entitled to take as much of the timber growing on the land as is necessary for the proper use and enjoyment of the land. Estovers consist of housebote (which includes firebote), haybote and ploughbote. (Co. Litt. 41 b, and 53 b.) In the second place in the case of timber estates, that is, land used merely for the purpose of growing timber trees, the tenant for life may cut and sell for his own benefit the yearly increase of the timber in a proper and husbandlike manner without committing waste. (Dashwood v. Magniac, (1891) 3 Ch. D. 306.)

Besides waste arising from acts of the tenant, which, as we have seen, is called voluntary waste, there is another kind which arises from his neglect merely, such as allowing the buildings on the land to get out of repair; this is called permissive waste. The ordinary life tenant is not liable at common law for permissive waste (In re Cartwright, 41 Ch. D. 532, discussing Woodhouse v. Walker, 5 Q. B. D. 404; Barnes v. Dowling, 44 L. T. 809), though he may be made liable for it by a clause in the instrument creating the estate binding him to keep the premises in repair. Such a clause, however, has lately been held not to compel him to execute works—such as cleansing an artificial lake—of an unusual and expensive character. (Dashwood v. Magniac, supra.)

Not merely may the instrument creating the life estate make the tenant liable as to waste for matters for which, at common law, he is not liable, but it may also free him from his common law liability. He is then said to be unimpeachable for waste. At common law, a life tenant unimpeachable for waste could commit what waste he liked. It was otherwise at equity. The Court of Chancery would not permit such a tenant to make an unconscientious use of his legal right to commit waste. It would not permit him, for instance, to dismantle the mansion house of the estate (Lord Barnard's case, 2 Vern. 738), or cut ornamental timber, save under the supervision of the Court, or do any other act of spoliation. (Baker v. Sebright, 13 Ch. D. 183; Garth v. Cotton, 1 W. & T. 750; and 1 Ves. 524, 546.) As this species of waste was recognized only in equity, it is called equitable waste. The Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25, sub-s. 3), which fused the administration of law and equity, expressly enacts that an estate for life, without impeachment of waste, will give no legal right to commit equitable waste. Of course, the instrument creating the life estate may confer on the life tenant the right to commit equitable waste, but an intention to confer this right must clearly appear before the Court will acknowledge it.

Emblements.—By emblements are meant, shortly, the year's crops—fructus industriales—and the right to emblements is the right of the tenant pur autre vie, or, in the case of an ordinary life tenancy, of the tenant's executors or administrators, on the determination of the life estate between seed time and harvest to have the current year's crops. This right does not exist, as far as the life tenant is concerned, when the estate is determined by the act of the tenant himself: for example, when an estate to a widow during her widowhood is ended by her re-marriage. For the purpose of taking the crops, the tenant or his representatives are entitled, at harvest time, to enter upon the land.

The right belongs to the sub-tenants of the life tenant in all cases, even in those where the life estate, on which the sub-tenancies depend, is determined by the voluntary act of the life tenant. (1 Rolle, Abr. 727.) It has been enacted, however (14 & 15 Vict. c. 25, s. 1), that tenants holding at a rack rent (which means at the full value of the land) under a tenant for life or for any other uncertain interest, instead of being entitled to emblements shall continue to hold on the same terms to the end of the current year of their tenancy.

It may here be added that rents are now regarded as accruing from day to day, and on the determination of a life estate between two rent days, the rent for the current quarter, payable by sub-tenants, is apportioned on that basis between the tenant for life and his representatives, and the remainderman or reversioner. (Apportionment Act, 1870: 33 & 34 Vict. c. 35, ss. 2 and 7.) Formerly, in such a case no one could recover any of the rent from the sub-tenants, as at common law none was due to the life tenant or his representatives as the tenancy determined before rent day—when the quarter's rent was payable—and none was due to the reversioner as there never was any tenancy under him. This was first altered by 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 15, which gave the executors or administrators of a deceased tenant for life a right to claim a proportionate part of the rent where the life tenant died before quarter day.

Alienation.—Estates for life, like fee simples, are freely alienable during life, and, as we have seen, when they survive the owner, they are subject to his will. Of course, he can only alienate the interest he owns, and the estate alienated will come to an end in the hands of the vendee or purchaser precisely at the same time as it would have determined had the grantee retained it. Formerly, if a tenant for life attempted to transfer the fee by feoffment (see p. 203, infra), this was held a tortious (or wrongful) conveyance, and was a ground of forfeiture of the estate. The Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 4) provides that a feoffment made after 1st October, 1845, shall not have any tortious operation.

Not merely is an estate for life alienable at the will of the owner, but it is also liable for his debts both during his life and (as we have seen) when it survives him after his death. (Supra, p. 48.)

Leases and Estates for Life.—The common law recognizes no differences between estates for life where the tenant holds the land for his own benefit, and estates, or more strictly, leases for life, where the tenant holds the land at a rent which usually is its full, and, may be more than its full value. Such a distinction, however, has long been recognized by the legislature, and, in many statutes, rights are conferred on the former class which are denied to the latter. We saw one instance of that in the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, under which the office of protector vests not in the first tenant holding a freehold interest, but the first tenant holding a freehold interest for his own benefit. The same distinction is observed in the Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 18), and still more markedly in the Settled Land Acts, 1882—1890 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), which confer, as we shall see (see p. 61, infra), great powers not merely of leasing but of sale, exchange, and management over the settled lands upon the beneficial life tenant in possession. The lessee for life at a rent has none of these powers. He can only sell his life interest, and any lease he may grant determines upon the determination of his life estate.

As we shall see, the powers vested in the beneficial tenant for life are to be exercised not for his own benefit but for the benefit of the inheritance, thus differing from the common law powers which he and the lessee at a rent equally enjoy, and which they exercise for their own exclusive advantage.

A. Settlements of Freeholds.

	PAGE		PAGE
Number of Estates in same		Trustees under Acts	60
Land	55	Powers given to Tenant for
Settlements of Freeholds	56	Life	61
Settled Land Acts, 1882-90 ..	58	Conditions of exercising Powers	62
Tenant for Life under Acts ..	60	Application of Capital Money.	63

Number of Estates in Same Land.—Estates in fee simple, estates in tail, and estates for life, are, then, the three freehold interests which can subsist in land. All three can subsist in the same plot of land at the same time, though, of course, only one can at one time be in possession, that is, in actual enjoyment. Not only so, but any number of estates in tail and for life can subsist at the same time in the same land. Thus, A. may have a life estate in Blackacre, B. may have a fee tail to follow A.'s life estate,

C. may have a fee tail to follow B.'s, and D. may have a life estate to follow C.'s fee tail. Of course, all the interests, whether life estates, fees tail, or fees simple that follow any fee tail, are liable to be destroyed, or barred, by the owner of that fee tail turning his estate into a fee simple.

This brings us to the second point. With regard to fees simple, three characteristics should be noted. In the first place, though there may be any number of life estates and fees tail in the same parcel of land, there can at common law be only one estate in fee simple. In the second place, though life estates and fees tail may or may not subsist in any parcel of land, a fee simple estate must subsist in every parcel in the kingdom not actually owned by the Crown. In the third place, where there are more than one freehold estate in a parcel of land, the fee simple must come last. These three characteristics arise out of the one already referred to, namely, that fee simple practically constitutes (see p. 29, supra), while no other interest or number of interests can constitute full ownership of land at common law.

Settlements of Freeholds.—Where there are several freehold estates subsisting in the same land at the same time, this is usually due to the land being in settlement, as it is called. A settlement is defined in the Settled Land Act, 1882 (sect. 2), as any instrument or number of instruments under or by virtue of which any land or estate or interest in land stands for the time being limited to or in trust for any persons by way of succession. (See In re Pocock and Pranker's Contract, (1896) 1 Ch. 302.)

Settlements came into fashion nearly two centuries after the practical repeal of the statute De Donis, and their object was much the same as that of the statute—to preserve hereditary estates in the family of the grantee, but in this case for the benefit of the grantee's—not the grantor's—heirs. Settlements accomplished this by the device of preventing, as far as possible, the inheritance in the land remaining for any length of time in the hands of any person or persons capable of alienating it. This they did in this way. The law did not permit interests in land to be given beyond the existing generation and the coming one, that is, beyond a living person and his unborn child. (See infra, p. 122.) This, however, by an ingenious manipulation, was made sufficient, practically, to keep the power of alienation in continual abeyance. Thus, A. is the owner of fee simple lands which he wishes to settle or tie up as strictly as possible. On his marriage, he settles these lands on himself for life with remainder in fee tail to the first born son of the marriage. There are other uses usually limited, as fee tails on death of the eldest son without heirs of the body to the second and other sons in succession, and on failure of sons, cross-remainders among the daughters, and powers are reserved to dower the widow and raise portions for the younger children out of the land. These, however, do not affect our point at present, and, for the sake of clearness, we will omit further reference to them. The original limitation, then, is, to A. for life with remainder in fee tail to the first son of the marriage. We will call this first son B. Now the effect of the limitation is that the estate tail cannot be barred by anyone until B. attains twenty-one years of age, B. being till then an infant. (See infra, p. 332.) B., on and after attaining that age, can with A.'s consent (A. being protector of the settlement), bar the estates tail, but if A. refuses his consent, then during A.'s life B. can create only a base fee. This base fee, until B. marries and has children, is little better than an estate for B.'s life in expectancy on A.'s life estate—an estate so uncertain as to be practically unsaleable. Meanwhile, though entitled to the land in remainder, B. has no present income from it. Accordingly, B. usually comes to an arrangement with A. whereby B., in consideration of receiving a part of the income of the property during A.'s life, consents to join with A. in breaking the entail and resettling the fee simple resulting. The fee simple is resettled as before—to B. for life subject to A.'s prior life estate, with remainder in tail to B.'s first son, &c. The effect of this is again to make the fee tail inalienable until B. has a son of the age of twenty-one. On that son's coming of age, the estate is again resettled in the same way. By this means it is so managed that almost as soon as alienation of the inheritance in the land is possible, the power to alienate is taken away again by a resettlement, which leaves to no living person more than a life estate, or a life estate and a fee simple in reversion to a contingent fee tail (see p. 129, infra), which fee simple, as we have seen, is liable to be barred as soon as the fee tail gets into the hands of a person over twenty-one years of age.

Settled Land Acts, 1882—1890.—The system of tying up land was found to militate against its proper management and development. To remedy this it became customary to introduce provisions into the instrument of settlement giving to the tenant for life or to the trustees of the settlement, or to both jointly, large powers of leasing, exchange, and sale over the settled land. Owners, however, who were more anxious to preserve certain land in their family than to improve it, refused to give these powers, often with results disastrous to the community. After various attempts on the part of the legislature to mitigate these evils, of which the most important was the Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 18), at last, in 1882, the Settled Land Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38) was passed. Put shortly, its effect is to give to every life tenant under any settlement all the powers usually given in a generously drawn settlement to the life tenant or the trustees, or both jointly. (See In re Clitheroe, 28 Ch. D. 378, at p. 389.) That act has since been amended by acts passed in 1884, 1889, and 1890 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 18; 52 & 53 Vict. c. 36; 53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), and the general name for all this legislation is The Settled Land Acts, 1882—1890. These Acts extend to England and Ireland, but not to Scotland. (Sect. 1, Act of 1882.) The Settled Estates Act, 1877, is not expressly repealed by them, but it is practically superseded.

Before considering these Acts in detail it is well to note three points with regard to the powers of sale and management which they confer. In the first place these powers are imported into every settlement, whether made before or after the passing of the Act of 1882, and whether the settlor wishes them to be imported or not. Any attempt to exclude or restrict them, whether by a direction in the settlement (sect. 51, Act of 1882) or by a contract entered into by the life tenant not to exercise them (sect. 50, Act of 1882), is expressly declared to be void.¹ In the second place the powers given by the Acts are not in substitution for powers expressly given in the settlement, but in addition to such express powers; in other words, the tenant can exercise not merely the statutory powers but also the express powers if the latter are in any way more extensive than the former. In the third place the exercise by the life tenant of these powers has no effect on the trusts or limitations of the settlement. The money or land procured by their exercise is subject to the same trusts and limitations as was the original settled land. And this is the case even when the person exercising the powers is tenant in fee tail of the settled land. Such a tenant, as we have seen, can bar the subsequent limitations by deed inrolled under the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, but he can do so in no other way. A sale by him under these acts has no effect whatever in barring the entail under the settlement; it merely transfers it from the land—which the purchaser receives in fee simple—to the purchase-money which, for the purposes of the settlement, the law will regard as the land itself.

¹ When, however, the settlement is made by way of trust for sale the life tenant's powers can be exercised only with the consent of the Court. (Sect. 7, Settled Land Act, 1884.)

Tenant for Life under Acts.—The powers, as we have seen, are primarily given to the tenant for life, and the tenant for life for the purposes of the acts is defined to be the person beneficially entitled to the possession of the settled land for his life. (Sect. 2, sub-sect. 5, Act 1882.) His interest need not necessarily be freehold. And a tenant in tail (sect. 58, Act 1882), and an infant tenant absolutely entitled (sect. 59, Act 1882), are to be considered tenants for life for the purposes of the act, though in the latter instance the powers are to be exercised not by the infant but by the trustees of the settlement, or if there be no trustees, by any one approved of by the Court. (Sect. 60, Act 1882.)

As to the words "person beneficially entitled to possession," that means a person entitled as owner in opposition to a person entitled in consideration of rent or other payment. It does not mean that the person must be entitled to the full benefit resulting from the land. Thus it has been held that the fact that the land was so heavily mortgaged that the life tenant received no income, nor had any immediate prospect of receiving any, did not prevent his being beneficially entitled under the acts. (In re Jones, 26 Ch. D. 736.)

Trustees within the Acts.—The second class of persons to whom important functions are delegated by the acts are the trustees of the settlement. These are:—

- (1.) Trustees under the settlement with power of sale, or with power to approve or consent to sale of the settled land. (Sect. 2, sub-sect. 8, Act 1882.)
- (2.) In absence of these, then any persons declared in the settlement to be trustees for the purposes of the acts. (Sect. 2, sub-sect. 8, Act 1882.)

- (3.) In absence of these, trustees under the settlement with power of sale, or with power to consent to sale, of other lands similarly settled. (Sect. 16, Act 1890.)
- (4.) In absence of these, trustees under the settlement with a future or contingent power of sale, or to consent to sale, of other lands similarly settled. (Sect. 16, Act 1890.)
- (5.) In absence of all these, Court will appoint proper persons to be trustees for purposes of the acts. (Sect. 38, Act 1882.)

Powers given to Tenant for Life by Acts.—The powers given by the acts to the tenant for life are numerous. The most important are the following :—

- (1.) To sell the settled land or any part of it, or any easement, right, or privilege over it. (Sect. 3, sub-s. (1), Act 1882.) There is a partial exception to this power in the case of the mansion-house and the lands usually occupied therewith, where, in certain cases, the consent of the trustees or an order of the Court is necessary for their sale. (Sect. 10, sub-s. (2), Act 1890.)
- (2.) To exchange the settled land, or any part thereof, for other land, and take money for equality of exchange. (Sect. 3, sub-s. (3), Act 1882.) There are two limitations to this power : one as to mansion-house as in sale (supra), and one prohibiting exchange of land in England for land out of England. (Sect. 4, sub-s. (8), Act 1882.)
- (3.) To concur in partition of settled land. (Sect. 3, sub-s. (4), Act 1882.)
- (4.) To grant leases of the settled land, or of part thereof, or of any easement, right, or privilege over it, whether involving waste or not, building lease not to exceed ninety-nine years, mining lease sixty years, other lease twenty-one years in England, thirty-five years in Ireland. (Sect. 6, Act 1882.)

 Building or mining lease may, with consent of Court, be extended even to lease in perpetuity. (Sect. 10, Act 1882.)

- (5.) To accept, with or without consideration, surrender of lease of settled land. (Sect. 13, Act 1882.)
- (6.) To appropriate land for streets, gardens, open spaces, &c., in connection with building leases. (Sect. 16, Act 1882.)
- (7.) To make, vary, or rescind contracts to carry into effect the purposes of the acts. (Sect. 31, Act 1882.)
- (8.) With consent of trustees or order of Court to cut and sell timber ripe and fit for cutting, though the tenant for life be impeachable for waste. (Sect. 35, Act 1882.)
- (9.) With order of Court to sell quasi-heirlooms, that is, personal chattels settled to accompany the inheritance. (Sect. 37, Act 1882.)
- (10.) To raise money by mortgage of settled land for the purpose (a) of paying off incumbrances (sect. 11, Act 1890); (b) for paying for equality of exchange or partition (sect. 18, Act 1882); (c) for paying costs ordered by Court to be paid out of settled lands (sect. 47, Act 1882).

Conditions of exercising Powers under Acts.—These powers must be exercised subject to the following conditions:—

- (1.) Where a consent of the trustees or an order of the Court is necessary, such consent or order must be obtained before the power is exercised. (In re Ames, (1893) 2 Ch. 479.)
- (2.) In any case, notice in writing of intention to exercise a particular power, or a general notice to exercise powers under the acts, must be given to two of the trustees and their solicitors at least a month before exercising the power. (Sect. 45, Act

- 1882.) But a person dealing with a tenant for life in good faith need not inquire whether such notice has been given, and the transaction will be good even if as a fact no notice has been given (Mogridge v. Clapp, (1892) 3 Ch. 382); and in the case of leases for periods not exceeding twenty-one years, no notice to trustees is necessary, and such leases may be made without there being any trustees existing. (Sect. 7, Act 1890.)
- (3.) A sale or exchange must be at the best price (In re Chavner's Settled Estates, (1892) 2 Ch. 192) or for the best consideration that can reasonably be obtained. (Sect. 4, Act 1882.) If a bribe be given by the purchaser to the tenant for life to induce him to carry out the transaction, the Court will hold the transaction void. (Chandler v. Bradley, (1897) 1 Ch. 315.)
 - (4.) In all cases the tenant for life is to have regard to the interests of all parties entitled under the settlement, and is to be deemed to be in the position of, and to have the liabilities of, a trustee for such parties. (Sect. 53, Act 1882; Dowager Duchess of Sutherland v. Duke of Sutherland, (1893) 3 Ch. 169.)
 - (5.) The powers are personal to the tenant for life. They cannot be assigned or released by him, and if he assigns his life interest, they remain in him and do not go to the assignee of the life interest. (Sect. 50, Act 1882.)
 - (6.) The trustees have an absolute discretion in their exercise of their functions under the acts, and, provided they act honestly, they are not liable for anything resulting from their action or inaction. (Sects. 41 and 42, Act 1882.)

Application of Capital Money under Acts.—The money arising through the exercise of the powers given by these acts is called capital money, and the acts make provision for the manner in which it shall be dealt with. Generally speaking, it is either to be held by the trustees of the settlement on the trusts of the settlement, or employed by the tenant for life with their consent for the benefit of the whole settled estate. These ends are secured by the following particular provisions:—

- (1.) Capital money may be paid to the trustees or into Court at the option of the tenant for life. (Sect. 22, Act 1882.)
 - (2.) In either case, if invested, the investment is to be made in authorized securities, the tenant for life having the first right to select among these; which right, if honestly exercised, cannot be interfered with by the trustees or the Court (In re Lord Coleridge's Settlement, (1895) 2 Ch. 704); and the income arising from the investment is to be applied in pursuance of the trusts of the settlement. (Sect. 22, sub-s. (2), Act 1882.)
 - (3.) If not invested in authorized securities, it may be applied—
 - (a) In discharge of incumbrances upon the settled land remaining unsold (sect. 21 (ii.), Act 1882); or
 - (b) In improvements on the settled land as authorized by the acts, according to a scheme approved by the trustees or the Court (sect. 21 (iii.), and sects. 25, 26, Act 1882); or
 - (c) In purchase of other lands to be held on the trusts of the settlement. (Sect. 21 (vii.), Act 1882.)
-

SUB-SECTION 2.

CHATTEL INTERESTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Origin of Chattel Interests ..	65	(b.) Tenancy at Will	78
Chattel Interests inferior to		(c.) Tenancy on Sufferance ...	79
Freeholds	66	B. Settlements of Chattel
(a.) Tenancy for Time Certain	68	Interests	80

Origin of Chattel Interests.—Originally, as we have seen, the only interests in land recognized by the law were freehold interests. The tenant of a parcel of land either had in him a freehold interest, or he had no legal interest at all, but merely held at will of the legal owner. Tenants at will were at first serfs, to whom their lord gave permission to farm part of his land during his pleasure. Gradually, as the serf became a freeman, villein tenure approximated to free tenure, and his tenancy at will (now called a copyhold) became a legal and heritable estate. (Supra, p. 21.)

The law, in transforming the nature of villein tenure, did not alter the interests which could be held in land. In copyholds, as in freeholds, the only interests recognized by the law were estates for life and estates of inheritance. Any agreement between an owner of land and another to grant to the latter an interest different from these—such as a tenancy for a term of years—was regarded as a mere personal contract between the parties. It conveyed no legal interest in the land to the grantee, and if the latter obtained possession of the land in pursuance of the agreement, he held it simply at the will of the owner, who could at any time determine the agreement and eject him; while a transfer of the land by fine or recovery ipso facto determined it, since the transferee was, by presumption of law, supposed to recover the land by a title superior to that of the late owner. (Co. Litt. 46 a.)

It is not necessary for our purposes to trace the steps by which contracts for the hiring of land for a certain time, from being mere personal agreements between the parties, came to convey an interest in the land itself. It is sufficient to say that since 21 Hen. VIII. c. 15, any such contract, when followed by entry on the land affected by it, conveys to the hirer a legal estate according to the terms of the agreement. Until an entry has taken place, the lessee has only what is called an interesse termini. (See p. 207.) Where, however, a lease for a time certain is created by bargain and sale, then the grantee is, by force of the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, A.D. 1536), deemed in law to be in possession from the bargain and sale. (See infra, p. 207.)

Chattel inferior to Freehold Interests.—These new interests in land being interests unknown to the ancient common law were treated by it with scant favour. Even after they had been made by statute indefeasible, it refused to regard them as estates in the land. The only ownership in land it would recognize was freehold ownership. And such is the case still. The freeholder, however small his interest, has, for the time being, the full property in the land. The tenant for a time certain, however large his interest, never has: he is regarded merely as having, in the language of the civilians, a jus in re aliena, a right of user in the land, which, however, remains the property, and the sole property, of the freeholder under or from whom he holds. He is not considered even as having the full legal possession of the land: he merely occupies as the bailiff of the freeholder, who, in the eye of the law, is really in possession. This is usually described by saying that every freeholder has the seisin of the land, while no chattel owner ever has it.

Various results follow from this inferiority which, though of little practical moment as far as the extent of the tenant's rights of ownership is concerned, are, as we shall see, of great importance in conveyancing. One or two may be mentioned here. In the first place, the smallest freehold is regarded as larger than the largest tenancy for a time certain. In the second place, no matter how large a tenancy for a time certain may be, it is never realty, but only personalty. For this reason, it is called a chattel interest in land or a chattel real. In the third place, owing to its not carrying with it the seisin in the land, it can be limited in a different way and by different means from those applicable to freeholds.

Tenancies for a time certain are incomparably the most important kinds of chattel interests in land; but there are others. Tenancies at will may still exist, and as far as they can be called interests at all, they also are chattel interests. (See infra, p. 78.) The same may be said of those even more shadowy interests called tenancies by sufferance. (See infra, p. 79.) But besides these, there are interests for uncertain periods of more substance, though not as a rule of very frequent occurrence at the present day. These are:—(1) Tenancies by elegit, i. e., the tenancy which a judgment creditor has who has obtained the possession of his debtor's land in execution of his judgment. His tenancy continues until the debt is satisfied. (2) Tenancies by executors when the owner of freehold land leaves it, by his will, to his executors for the payment of his debts. (3) Tenancies by statutes merchant and statutes staple. (Co. Litt. 42 a; 2 Bl. Com. 161.) All these, save the first, are now obsolete.

(a.) Tenancy for a Time Certain.

	PAGE		PAGE
Tenancy for a Time Certain..	68	Determination of Leases for
Leases from Year to Year....	68	Time Certain	71
Terms of Years	69	Incidents of Leaseholds.....	74

Tenancy for a Time Certain.—By a tenancy for a time certain is meant a tenancy for a period either ascertained or capable of being ascertained before the commencement or during the continuance of the tenancy. The reverse of freehold interests in this respect, it cannot be limited for an uncertain period; there must be some fixed date for its commencement, and some fixed date beyond which it cannot extend. Thus, a lease for a week, or for a month, or for a year, or for any number of years from any given date, is a good lease, because, from the first, the period for which each is to last is fixed and certain. So is a lease for as many years as A. B. shall name, for here the period for which the lease is to continue is capable of being made certain by A. B. stating the number of years. (Co. Litt. 45 b.) But a lease for as many years as A. B. shall live is, from its inception, void, because the period for which it is to continue can only be ascertained on A. B.'s death when the lease itself shall be determined. (2 Bl. Com. 143.) Of course, a lease for the life of A. B. in freehold would be a good grant, but then the grantor would himself have to be a freeholder, and the grant would have to be made subject to the conditions applying to freeholds. Practically a lease for as many years as A. B. shall live can be given by limiting to A. B. a lease for a hundred years should A. B. live so long. (Co. Litt. 45 b.) Here the period of the lease is certain, though by a collateral condition it may be determined before that period.

Leases from Year to Year.—One of the most common classes of leases for a time certain is leases from year to year. These, like leases by the week or month, continue until they are determined by legal notice or mutual agreement. As to what amounts to legal notice in their case, that usually is expressly settled by the terms of the lease itself; but where the notice to be given is not so settled, the proper notice in ordinary leases is a half-year's notice expiring with the current year of the tenancy. When the tenancy commenced on one of the usual quarter days, the notice should be given on or before the quarter day ending the first half of the tenancy year; but if the tenancy begins on any other day, a notice of 183 days expiring with the last day of the tenancy year should be given. (Morgan v. Davies, 3 C. P. D. 360.) In the case of leases of agricultural land, the proper notice is a year's notice expiring in the same way. (Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), sect. 33; in Ireland, Notice to Quit Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 63).) In both cases where the tenant enters between the usual quarter days and there is no express agreement as to when the tenancy is to commence, it must be taken to commence either on the day of entry or on the following quarter day, and the notice given, to be valid, must expire on one of those days. (Sidebotham v. Holland, (1895) 1 Q. B. 378; Simmons v. Underwood, 76 L. T. 777.)

For the peculiar incidents attached by recent legislation to leases from year to year in agricultural land in Ireland, the reader is referred to Appendix B.

Terms of Years.—The most important class of leases for a time certain is leases for several or a number of years, or "terms" as they are called. Terms of years, besides being granted for building purposes, and in other cases where it is necessary or desirable that the lessee should have some security of tenure, are or were often created for the purpose of securing a mortgage debt on the land or the payment of money charged upon it, as, for example, portions for younger children in the case of a settled estate. (See p. 70, infra.) In the latter case, the estate was settled for life on the first tenant, then a term was granted to trustees to raise portions, and subject to this the estate was settled on the eldest son of the first tenant.

In terms created for the purpose of securing or raising money, there usually was a "proviso for ceaser," i.e., a proviso that they should determine when their object was accomplished. Sometimes, however, the term was kept alive after its purpose was fulfilled, and then it was assigned to attend the inheritance, i.e., it was assigned to trustees to hold in trust for the benefit of the owner of the inheritance in the land (if it had been assigned to the owner himself, it would have merged in his freehold). (See p. 71, infra.) The object of this was, that in case of sale of the inheritance, the term, if assigned to trustees for the purchaser, would protect him against any rentcharge created by any owner of the inheritance since the term was granted. Now, however, by the Satisfied Terms Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 112), for the future all satisfied terms, that is, terms the purposes of which have been fulfilled, are, immediately on becoming attendant on the inheritance, to determine; but as to such as become attendant on the inheritance before the 1st January, 1846, they, while determining on 31st December, 1845, are still to afford every person the same protection as if they still existed, and were held in trust to attend the inheritance. (Anderson v. Pignet, L. R. 8 Ch. Ap. 180.)

It is evident that a long term, say 1,000 years, subject to a nominal rent, is, for all practical purposes, equivalent to the fee simple of the land. A power to convert such a long term into fee simple is given by sect. 65 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), as amended by sect. 11 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39). By these statutes, a term of not less than 300 years, 200 of which are still unexpired, which is without any trust or right of redemption in favour of the freeholder or other person entitled in reversion, and which is not subject to any rent having a money value, may be enlarged into a fee simple by means of a deed declaring to that effect. All trusts, limitations, &c., affecting the term are to apply to the fee simple.

Determination of Lease for Time Certain.—Though a lease for a time certain usually determines by effluxion of time, yet it may come to an end before the period fixed for its determination. This premature determination arises most commonly from the surrender of the lease, its merger, or its forfeiture.

(a.) Surrender is either surrender in fact or surrender in law. Surrender in fact means simply the giving up by the lessee of his interest under the lease to his lessor. Surrender in law takes place when the tenant consents to any act inconsistent with the continuance of his tenancy. Accepting another lease dating from the present time is such an act, and so is consenting to another lease being granted to a third person, but only if followed by the tenant giving up possession of the land to the new lessee. (Nickells v. Atherstone, 10 Q. B. 944; Wallis v. Hands, (1893) 2 Ch. 75.)

By the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3), a surrender in writing of any interest in land which is not a copyhold interest, and which could not be created by parol, is to be void except it is made by deed. (See p. 206.) In Ireland, surrenders may be in writing merely. (Landlord and Tenant Act, 1860, s. 7.)

(b.) Merger arises where a greater and a less estate in the same parcel of land meet in one and the same person without any intermediate estate (2 Bl. Com. 177); the lesser estate then merges or is absorbed into the larger. Thus, if A. have a lease for years, and any freehold interest comes to him, the lease for years is absorbed or merged in the freehold. And if A.'s leasehold is granted out of a longer leasehold, and A. buys the longer leasehold, that is, the reversion on his interest, the latter is merged in the former. And similarly, if a life tenant obtains the reversion in fee on his life estate, the latter becomes merged in the former. An exception occurs in the case of fees tail. The same person can have at the same time a fee tail and the immediate reversion in fee simple on it in the same parcel of land without merger resulting, this being due to the operation of the statute De Donis, the provisions of which would be rendered ineffectual in such cases if merger resulted. (2 Rep. 61 ; 8 Rep. 74.)

At law merger takes place only when both interests are held in the same right. (In re Radcliffe, Radcliffe v. Bewes, (1892) 1 Ch. 227.) Thus, if A. holds a larger interest in Blackacre in his own right, and a smaller interest in Blackacre in right of his wife, there is no merger. (See infra, p. 262.) But as the common law took no cognizance of trusts affecting land, it was not necessary that both interests should be held in beneficial ownership. Thus, if A. held one interest in Blackacre absolutely, and another interest in Blackacre as trustee for another, this did not prevent merger at law. In equity, however, there was no merger in such cases. Nor was there a merger in equity where it was plainly intended that no merger was intended by the parties. (Lewin on Trusts, p. 620, 7th ed.) And now by the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-s. 4, there is to be no merger henceforth at law where there is none in equity. (Snow v. Boycott, (1892) 3 Ch. 110.)

(c.) Forfeiture.—The payment of the rent reserved and the observance of the covenants and conditions contained in the lease are usually secured by a proviso for re-entry by the lessor on the land leased on the non-payment of the rent, or on breach of condition or covenant by the lessee. On such re-entry the lease ceases or determines.

Formerly, a proviso of re-entry was destroyed by (a) the lessor actually waiving the right—that is, expressly refusing to take advantage of the right of re-entry when the chance occurred ; (b) his giving his licence to do an act which, without his licence, would cause a forfeiture ; (c) the severance of the reversion to which the right of re-entry belonged—that is, the dividing between two or more of the estate in reversion which would come into possession by the exercise of the right. By Lord St. Leonards' Acts, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, ss. 1—3), and 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 6), and by the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 12), the law is altered. Now, a waiver is to apply only to the particular breach actually waived, the licence is to apply only to the particular act actually licensed, and on the reversion being severed the conditions of all kinds are to be apportioned between the persons among whom the reversion is divided, and the right of re-entry is to attach to each part of the reversion: (Sect. 12, Conveyancing Act, 1881.) This latter provision only applies, however, to leases made after the commencement of the act (1st January, 1882). As to leases made before that, conditions of re-entry for non-payment of rent, or other reservation, alone survive the severance of the reversion. (Lord St. Leonards' Act, 1859, s. 3.)

Relief against forfeiture can now in most cases be obtained. Where the forfeiture is for non-payment of rent, the tenant can stop the proceedings for ejectment by paying the rent due with costs before the judgment, or can obtain relief by paying these within six months after judgment. (Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), ss. 210, 212.) There is no forfeiture for non-payment of rent except demand is expressly made for it on the last day on which it is payable, unless the lease expressly provides otherwise, or except half a year's rent is due, and there is no sufficient distress on the premises. (Id. s. 210.)

Where the forfeiture is not for non-payment of rent, sect. 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, applies. Under it a lessor, before bringing an action of ejectment for breach of condition, must serve the lessee with a notice requiring, where remedy is possible, that the lessee shall remedy the breach, and claiming compensation in any case. On bringing his action of ejectment the Court can grant relief or refuse it, and if it grant it, it can do so on terms as to costs, compensation, &c. This section does not apply to covenants against assigning and subletting, or to covenants for the inspection of mines, or the books or weighing machines of mines. No relief can be granted on breach of any of these covenants, even where in covenants against subletting or assigning without the lessor's consent, the lessor must have consented if asked. (Barrow v. Isaacs, (1891) 1 Q. B. 417.) Nor does it apply to conditions forfeiting the lease on the lessee becoming bankrupt, or having his interest taken in execution. Forfeiture under a condition forfeiting the lease in case of bankruptcy or execution is now provided for by sect. 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13). That section provides (sub-sect. 2) that forfeiture in such cases is not to take place until a year after the execution or bankruptcy, and then only if the lessee's interest be not meanwhile sold. This enactment, however, does not apply (sub-sect. 3) to leases of agricultural or pastoral land, of mines or minerals, of public-houses or beer-houses, of furnished dwelling-houses, or of any property where personal qualification on the part of the lessee is important. In all these cases there is no relief. But by sect. 4 of the same act, in all cases of forfeiture under a covenant or condition in a lease, the Court may, on the application of a sub-lessee, order the forfeited lease to vest in such sub-lessee for the term of his sub-lease on such conditions as it thinks proper. (Wardens of Cholomeky School v. Sewell, (1894) 2 Q. B. 906.) Thus the sub-lessee may obtain relief denied to the lessee; but the Court will exercise its jurisdiction with great caution, and only give such relief where the sub-lessee was blameless in the matter. (Imray v. Oakshette, (1897) 2 Q. B. 218.)

Incidents of Leaseholds.—The incidents of leaseholds, like those of tenancies for life, are usually regulated by the instrument creating the estate. When they are not, they are much the same as those which the common law attaches to a life estate.

(a) Waste.—The lessee is liable for voluntary but not for permissive waste. (Davies v. Davies, 38 Ch. D. 499, cannot now be considered good law: see In re Cartwright, 41 Ch. D. 532.)

In Ireland, certain acts on the part of a tenant are made statutory waste by sects. 26—31 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1860, and by sect. 35 of the same act justices of the peace are empowered to issue precepts to restrain the commission of these acts.

Like the tenant for life, a lessee is entitled to estovers.

(b) Emblements.—Where the lessee held under a lessor who possessed an uncertain interest—such as an estate for life—the lessee, as we have seen, was, on its determination between seed time and harvest, entitled to emblements. (See supra, p. 53.) Now, where he holds at a rack rent, he is to hold on the land till the end of the current year of his tenancy (14 & 15 Vict. c. 25, s. 1); and by the Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), the rent for the current year is to be divided between the executors or administrators of the deceased lessor and the reversioner in proportion to the number of days the interest in the land had been vested in the lessor and the reversioner.

(c) Rent.—Another incident of a leasehold is rent. The amount of rent to be paid is almost invariably fixed by the instrument creating the estate. Where, however, it is not so fixed, the lessee is liable for the use and occupation of the land leased, unless the instrument expressly exempts him from rent of any kind. When rent is reserved, it need not be a money payment. It may be any form of profit, except a profit which is part of the land, or what is called in law a profit à prendre—which would not be a rent but an exception from the lease. (2 Bl. Com. 41.) In practice, however, rents are fixed money payments to be made at settled periods.

The chief remedies for non-payment of rent are by action to enforce payment, distress, and forfeiture of lease. With the last we have already dealt. (See supra, p. 72.) As to the second an action lies on the contract of leasing for any rent reserved in the lease, whether or not there is a covenant to pay such rent. A covenant to pay it is, however, usually inserted in leases, because it renders the lessee liable personally for the rent throughout the existence of the term, even if he parts with, or, as the technical expression is, assigns the term to another person. Whether there is or is not a covenant to pay rent, the assignee of the term is liable to pay any rent reserved in the lease as long as he is in possession of the land, but no longer. As soon as he assigns the lease his liability ends. This arises from the fact that he has made no contract to pay the rent; he is merely liable to pay it by what is called privity of estate, and as soon as the privity of estate comes to an end, so does his liability for further rent. Distress is a remedy given by the common law upon a rent reserved on a lease. At common law it could be levied only during the continuance of the lease on which the rent was reserved, but it was enacted by 8 Anne, c. 14, ss. 6, 7, that in case of any tenant who continues in possession of the land after his lease has determined, distress may be made on the land at any time within six months after such determination.

The remedy by distress consists at common law of a right to enter on the land and seize and sell any goods thereon, whether belonging to the tenant or not, save only such as are (a) annexed to the land, (b) delivered by their owner to the tenant to be dealt with in the way of his trade, (c) in actual use at the time of the distress, (d) and such things as cannot be restored to the owner in the condition they were at the time of seizure, such as butcher's meat. These things are said to be absolutely privileged, while beasts of the plough and instruments of husbandry, and the instruments of a man's trade or profession are conditionally privileged—that is, they cannot be seized and sold if there are other distrainable goods sufficient to satisfy the rent. (Simpson v. Hartopp, 1 Sm. Lead. Cas.)

These common law rules as to what may be distrained have been considerably altered by statute. In the first place, growing crops, though annexed to the soil, are now distrainable (11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 8); and so are sheaves of corn, though they cannot be restored in the condition in which they were when seized. (2 W. & M. c. 5.) Again, under the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act (34 & 35 Vict. c. 79), a lodger's goods or furniture cannot be seized and sold for arrears of rent due from the landlord of the lodger to the superior landlord, provided the lodger pays over to the latter any arrears of rent he may owe to his landlord. And by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), s. 45, in the case of agricultural land, a similar privilege is conferred on the owner of "live stock taken in by the tenant of a holding to be fed at a fair price," such owner being entitled to redeem such stock if distrained by payment of price, if any, due to the tenant for feeding the stock." And by sect. 4 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 21), goods protected from seizure in execution under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 96, are to be exempt from distress, save where the interest of the tenant has expired, and demand for possession has been made and distress has been levied not earlier than seven days after such demand. Under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 96, which is repealed and re-enacted by sect. 147 of the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), the wearing apparel and bedding of a judgment debtor and his family, and the tools and implements of his trade to the value of five pounds, are protected from seizure in execution. The Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, further regulates the mode in which, and the persons by whom, distresses shall be levied. It does not apply to Ireland or Scotland. The Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 24), s. 4, gives a remedy for unlawful distress in a court of summary jurisdiction, that is, before magistrates in petty sessions.

In Ireland, an exemption from distress of the lessee's apparel, bedding, and tools to the same extent as that created by the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, is made by the Law of Distress and Small Debts (Ireland) Act, 1888, s. 5 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 47), and by that act, as amended by the Law of Distress and Small Debts (Ireland) Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 36), special provision is made as to distresses for rent where the amount due and distrained for does not exceed 20l.

(d) Alienation.—Leaseholds may be alienated or (as in case of personalty the phrase is) assigned freely unless there is a covenant in the instrument creating them prohibiting assignment, except with the consent of the lessor.

They are also freely alienable by will upon the lessee's death. It may here be pointed out that when freeholds are disposed of by will, they are said to be devised, and the disposition is called a devise. In the case of leaseholds and goods, they are said to be bequeathed, and the disposition is called a bequest or legacy. Leaseholds, like other personalty, vest, on the death of the lessee, if he has left a will, in his executors in trust for the purposes of his will, or, if he has died intestate, in his administrators appointed by the Court of Probate, in trust, after payment of his debts, for his next of kin. (See Part IV.)

(e) Liability of Leaseholds for Debts.—Leaseholds can be taken in execution for their owner's debts during his life, and, after his death, they are liable for his debts in the hands of his executors and administrators.

(b.) Tenancy at Will.

Tenancy at Will.—Tenancies at will still exist, although they are not often met with. They arise either by express agreement or by construction of law. Those arising in the latter way are most usual. Thus, as we shall see (see p. 171), when a mortgagor is permitted by the mortgagee to retain possession of the mortgaged land after the execution of the mortgage, he is usually tenant at will of the mortgagee. Again, when a tenant enters upon land in pursuance of an invalid lease for a time certain, he is precisely like one who entered in pursuance of a lease for a time certain before leases of this description were made enforceable; he is a tenant at will. The Court, however, leans against tenancies at will, that is, it will take advantage of the slightest indication to hold that a tenancy for a time certain was created. The relation between mortgagor and mortgagee is peculiar, but in all other cases of tenancies, where there was no express agreement as to the duration of the tenancy, payment of rent by the week, month, or year is usually sufficient to lead the Court to declare that the tenancy is a weekly, monthly, or yearly tenancy, and not a tenancy at will. A tenancy at will may be determined either by express notice given by either party to the other, or by any act of either party which the law regards as inconsistent with regard to the continuance of the tenancy. Such acts on the part of the lessor as granting a lease for years to commence at once, or a freehold estate in possession, or as entering upon the land to open mines or cut timber, and such acts on the part of the lessee as assigning the tenancy or committing waste, are so regarded by the law.

(c.) Tenancy by Sufferance.

Tenancy by Sufferance.—If a lessee, whether at will or for a time certain, holds over after his interest has determined, he becomes what is called a tenant at or by sufferance. A tenancy by sufferance is defined as the interest—as far as it is a legal interest—which arises where a tenant, who obtained possession of the land under a legal title, retains possession without leave after his title has ceased. Practically the tenancy amounts to this, that the tenant is not regarded by the law as a trespasser on the land. There can, however, be no tenancy by sufferance when the lessor is the Crown, and in this case any tenant holding over is liable to an action for trespass. (2 Bl. Com. 150.)

A tenant holding over after receiving a proper notice to quit in writing from the lessor is made liable for double the value of the land by 4 Geo. 2, c. 28. And a tenant holding over after giving his lessor either written or parol notice to quit—where parol notice is by the lease sufficient—is liable to double rent by 11 Geo. 2, c. 19.

B. Settlements of Chattels Real.

	PAGE		PAGE
Partial Interests in Leaseholds		Partial Interests in Leaseholds
at Law	80	in Equity	81

Partial Interests in Leaseholds at Law.—Leaseholds, as has already been explained, are not, properly speaking, things, but merely proprietary rights in things, i.e., in lands. They are, however, regarded by the law as chattels or goods, and so the common law doctrine that there can be nothing but absolute ownership in goods applies to them. No estates or partial interests can subsist in leaseholds. Thus, if a term, say of a thousand years, be assigned to A. for life and afterwards to B. and his executors or assigns, the law vests the whole term in A., and treats the remainder to B. as void.

A partial exception to this occurs in the case of limited interests created in leaseholds by will. (See infra, p. 142.) If a term of a thousand years be bequeathed to A. for life, and afterwards to B., the remainder to B. will be good. The law will regard the whole term as vested absolutely in A., subject, like a determinable fee, to a collateral condition (his death during the continuance of the term) on the fulfilment of which the ownership of the term will shift over to B. During A.'s life B. is regarded as having no interest in the term, but a mere possibility, that is, a chance of obtaining the term. This possibility was inalienable at law except by will. It was, however, alienable in equity, and now by the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 6, an executory and a future interest, and a possibility coupled with an interest, in any tenements or hereditaments of any tenure may be disposed of by deed. If, in the instance given, there were no limitation over after the life interest of A., then on A.'s death the residue of the term would be undisposed of by the will, and would go like other undisposed of personalty.

It may be mentioned that a life tenant of leaseholds is liable for voluntary but not for permissive waste, and if the premises were out of repair at the testator's death, he is not bound to put them into repair. (In re Courtier, Coles v. Courtier, 34 Ch. D. 136; and In re Baring, Jeune v. Baring, (1893) 1 Ch. 61.) Of course, however, if there are directions in the will that the life tenant shall put or keep the premises in repair, the life tenant, on accepting the bequest, is bound by these.

Partial Interests in Leaseholds in Equity.—This, then, was as far as the law permitted the ownership of leaseholds to be portioned out among successive owners. Equity, however, allowed it to be divided up and successive interests created in it as freely as the law allowed this to be done in freeholds. This it accomplished not by repealing, at any rate nominally, the rule of law, but by turning the absolute owner at law into a trustee for those entitled in equity to the partial interests.

In equity, as in law, leaseholds are personalty, and the rules which govern equitable interests in personalty are the same, whether the personalty is leaseholds or goods. These will be treated of in the next section.

SECTION II.

INTERESTS IN GOODS.

	PAGE		PAGE
(a) At Law	82	Operation of Equity	85
(b) In Equity	83	Equitable Interests in Goods .	85
Sources of English Law..	83	Express Trusts of Goods	86
Rise of Equity.....	84	C. Settlements of Goods	87

(a) At Law.

Legal Interests.—As has already been said, the common law in theory permitted nothing except absolute ownership in goods. In practice, however, it forbade the ownership to be divided as to duration, but it permitted it to be divided as to use. But it did not recognize the person entitled to the use of the goods for the time being as having any share of the ownership of them. He had simply a jus in re aliena—a limited right over a thing which belonged to another. In this respect the hirer of goods is much in the same position as the lessee of lands, and, perhaps logically, it would be proper to treat here of hiring goods. Hire of goods, however, is merely one form of bailment, and most of the other forms of bailment gave rise to rights in the bailee more akin to easements over than interests in land; and on the whole it is perhaps more convenient to treat of all forms of bailment together. (See infra, p. 289.)

Since the Statute of Wills (32 Hen. VIII. c. 1) the law has recognized successive interests in goods created by will—what are called executory bequests—though such interests are contrary to the principles of the ancient common law. These will be more conveniently discussed when we come to future interests. (See infra, p. 141.)

Successive interests in goods most frequently arise through trusts, and are in their nature purely equitable. It is to these that the remainder of this section will be devoted.

(b) In Equity.

Sources of English Law.—English jurisprudence, by which we mean the whole system of justice administered by the Queen's Courts, is derived from three sources. The first of these is what is called common law, that is, the ancient law and customs of the realm which are presumed to have existed from time immemorial. All the new law created by the decisions of judges of the common law Courts is, in theory, only new applications of the original principles of the common law. The second source is equity. Unlike the common law, equity avowedly arises out of the decisions of the judges of the Court of Chancery in times past. At the present time, as in the case of the common law, all the new law created by decisions of Chancery judges is, in theory, assumed to be merely new applications of the principles laid down by their predecessors long ago. The third source of law is Acts of Parliament. As these are not administered by distinct courts, as Common law and equity long were, and to a certain extent are still, and as, moreover, they constitute in no sense a system of law proceeding on general principles which common law and equity both largely were, it is neither customary nor convenient to treat of them separately from the two systems which they are intended to alter and amend.

The authority of the common law arises from the assumption that it always has been the law; that of equity from its presumed ethical superiority to the common law (from which superiority it derives its name); and that of Acts of Parliament from their being enacted as law by an authority entitled to legislate.

Formerly, equity and the common law were administered by different Courts. Mere equitable rights were not recognized in the common law Courts; and the Chancery Courts constantly issued injunctions to prevent litigants asserting their legal rights, when these were opposed to equity, in the common law Courts. Now, by the Judicature Act, 1873, the administration of law and equity is fused to this extent,—that while all the Superior Courts have jurisdiction both in law and equity, yet actions founded purely on equitable rights should still be brought in the Chancery Division, and the Courts of Common Law (or, as they are now called, Courts of Queen's Bench Division) are to recognize equitable defences or rights when they come incidentally before them in a law suit.

Rise of Equity.—Originally the Aula Regis, or King in Council, was the supreme law court of the realm. Besides administering the common law, however, the Aula Regis had a vague jurisdiction to suspend or amend it in cases where it denied a remedy to a person injured, or where its application would result in palpable injustice. When the common law Courts grew out of the Aula Regis, this jurisdiction remained in the King, and it became customary to petition him where the common law Courts could not or would not do justice. In dealing with these petitions, the King was from the first assisted by his Chancellor. In Edward I.'s time, it was directed by proclamation that all such petitions were to be presented through the Chancellor, and a proclamation of Edward III. definitely refers "all matters of grace" to the decision of the Chancellor. That great official was at this time always an ecclesiastic, and, as an ecclesiastic, he was usually more familiar with Roman than with English law. As might be expected, then, he favoured the supersession of all common law rules which tended to the disadvantage of the Church, and he inclined to regard the doctrines of Roman law, when these differed from those of English law, as superior to the latter in wisdom and equity. These two leanings gave rise to most of the differences in principle and in procedure which originally, at any rate, distinguished equity from the common law.

Operation of Equity.—The Chancellor, not having any admitted legislative authority, could not expressly repeal a rule of the common law. He had, therefore, when he wished to repeal it, to do so by evading it, and he found an effective means of doing this in the power which his court possessed to attach, that is, arrest and imprison, for contempt of its authority. Thus, if a person possessed certain rights at common law which the Chancellor thought he should not possess, the Court of Chancery did not—it could not—take these legal rights from him. What it did was either to prohibit him from exercising them or to order him to exercise them in a certain way. If he refused or neglected to obey its direction, it treated his disobedience as a contempt of Court, and committed him to prison, where he remained until he purged his contempt, that is, until he obeyed its directions. (1 Rep. 121 b.)

Equitable Interests in Goods.—Two applications of this procedure occur in the case of limitations of partial interests in goods and leaseholds, the latter being, as we have explained, regarded in law as goods. If goods were bequeathed to a person for life, with remainder over to some one else, at common law the life owner was owner absolutely. Equity regarded this as unjust, but could not alter it expressly. It could, however, alter it practically. It permitted, as it had to do, the legal ownership to remain in the life owner; but it declared him trustee of the goods for the person or persons entitled after him under the gift. It compelled him to make an inventory of the goods given to him (sometimes even to give security for their preservation); and if on his death any of them were missing or destroyed, his estate was liable for their value. The only exception to this rule arises in the case of goods que ipso usu consumuntur, which are consumed by their use, such as a cellar of wine, cigars, or bread-stuffs. As a limited interest in these would be of no value if at the end of it the partial owner had to hand them over as he received them, equity permits him to use them in the only way they can be used—by consuming them—and refused to recognize any partial or limited interest in them. (Randall v. Russell, 3 Meriv. 190.)

By sect. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, it is enacted that where the rules of equity and law conflict, the rules of equity shall prevail. Henceforth, accordingly, equitable interests in goods will be recognized in Courts of Common Law as well as in the Chancery Division.

Express Trusts of Goods.—The most usual way in which partial interests in goods are created is by means of trusts. When goods were assigned to persons with a direction that they should hold them for the benefit of other persons in succession, the assignees were, at common law, the absolute owners, and the direction to hold the goods for the benefit of others was void. Equity, however, regarded it as contrary to good faith for the assignees to take advantage of this rule of law. It held that the assignees were in conscience bound to carry out the directions of the assignor, and it insisted on their doing so. It left, as it had to do, the legal ownership of the goods in the assignees, but it declared that they held them in trust for the persons entitled to them under the direction of the assignor. Limitations of goods in this way were called express trusts. (See Part III.)

C. Settlements of Goods.

	PAGE		PAGE
Settlements of Goods	87	Limitation of Interests in Goods	87

Settlements of Goods.—Express trusts most commonly arise now under marriage settlements. Under these, some of the husband's, and usually all of the wife's, personalty are assigned to certain persons to hold on the trusts set out in the settlement. These trusts generally are of the husband's property to him for life, then wholly or partly to the wife for her life; of the wife's property to her for life without power of anticipation, and then to the husband for life. During their joint lives they have a joint power of appointing the trust funds (subject to their life interest) among their children, and this power, if not exercised by them jointly, survives to the survivor. If not exercised at all, then, if there are children of the marriage, the trust funds go on the survivor's death between these equally; if there are no children, the husband's and wife's property go under their respective wills, or, if they die intestate, to their next of kin under the Statutes of Distribution.

Under the Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), as between limited owner and remainderman, the income of settled property is considered as accruing from day to day.

Limitation of Interests in Goods.—Goods and leaseholds are not, and cannot be made, heritable. Accordingly, the words "heirs" and "heirs of the body" have no meaning in connection with them. If goods are assigned or bequeathed to a person without words of inheritance or succession, the absolute interest in them vests in him. If they are given to him and his heirs, or to him and the heirs of his body, the effect is the same, though such a gift if made by will may be construed as giving a life estate to the parent with remainder to his children. (Ferne, 371; Papillon v. Voice, 2 P. Wms. 471.) It is usual to assign goods—when it is desired to transfer the absolute interest—to the assignee and his executors and assigns, but these latter words are quite unnecessary; they merely describe incidents of the ownership of goods which would attach to that ownership whether they were used or not.

Two points may be noted here in connection with settlements of goods. In the first place, owing to their not being heritable in their nature, goods never can be settled in specie on exactly the same limitations as freehold land. As has been pointed out, the usual marriage settlement of land is to bridegroom for life, then to the eldest son of the marriage in tail, and if that son should die without issue, then to the second son in tail, and so on. Under this settlement, if the eldest son dies without issue before he attains twenty-one, the land must go to the second son, and if he lives over twenty-one, then, unless he bars the entail, it will still go to the second son on the death of the eldest son without issue. As in the case of personalty, no estate tail can be created; all that can be done in this case is to give an absolute interest to the eldest son. On the birth of an eldest son this interest vests in him, and all remainders fail. The consequence is that on his death without issue the second son does not take as in a limitation of freeholds, but the settled funds are divided among the next of kin of the eldest son. This may, to a certain extent, be avoided by making the absolute interest not to vest in the eldest son till he attains twenty-one, that being, as we shall see, the most distant time to which the vesting can be postponed. (See Part III.) In that case, if the son dies before twenty-one, the second son succeeds.

The second point to be noted is this: When the thing settled is not to be enjoyed by the beneficiaries in specie, the question whether the settlement is to be considered a settlement of personalty or a settlement of realty depends not on the actual nature of the thing settled at the date of the execution of the settlement, but on its nature when the ultimate interest under the settlement is to vest in possession. Thus, freehold land settled on trust to sell and pay the income of the proceeds to A. for life, and on A.'s death to divide the corpus—i.e., the principal or fund itself—between C. and D., will be, from the execution of the settlement, and before any sale has taken place, considered in equity to be not freehold land but money, and therefore personalty. On the other hand, money settled on trust to be invested on the purchase of freehold land to be held to the use of A. for life, and then to A.'s eldest son and his heirs, will be, from the execution of the settlement, and before any land has been purchased, regarded in equity as land. This is very briefly what is meant by the equitable doctrine of conversion. (Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Bro. C. C. 497 ; 1 W. & T.)

PART III.

MODES OF HOLDING INTERESTS.

	PAGE
Modes of Holding Interests	90
SECTION I.—IN TRUST OWNERSHIP	91
SECTION II.—IN CONCURRENT OWNERSHIP	101
Sub-section (1).— Joint Tenancy	103
(2).— Coparcenary	112
(3).— Tenancy in Common	115
(4).— Tenancy by Entireties	116
SECTION III.—IN FUTURE OWNERSHIP	118
Sub-section (1).— Future Ownership at Common Law	118
(2).— Future Ownership in Equity	135
(3).— Future Ownership by Statute	139
(4).— Powers	146
(5).— Perpetuities and Accumulations	154
SECTION IV.—IN CONDITIONAL OWNERSHIP	159
Sub-section (1).— Mortgages of Land	169
Part A.— Mortgages by Deed	170
B.— Mortgages by Deposit	184
Sub-section (2).— Mortgages of Goods	187

Modes of holding Interests.—Ownership, whether absolute or partial, may be described as normal when it is beneficial, exclusive, immediate and unconditional. Frequently, however, it does not fulfil all these requirements. Thus, a person may own a thing for another or others, as, for example, Blackacre may be held by A. and his heirs in trust for B. for life, and afterwards for B.'s eldest son and his heirs. Here, A.'s ownership is not beneficial. Or again, a person may own a thing with another or others, as, for example, A., B. and C. may have Blackacre vested in them jointly in fee simple. Here A.'s or B.'s or C.'s ownership is not exclusive. Or again, a person may own a thing after another or others, as, for example, A. may have the fee simple in Blackacre after the determination of B.'s life estate. Here A.'s ownership is not immediate. Or lastly, a person may own a thing subject to a condition which, in certain events, will transfer the ownership to another or others, as, for example, A. may have the fee simple in Blackacre subject to a proviso that if B. pays him 10,000*l.* on a certain day he will convey the fee simple back to B. Here A.'s ownership is not unconditional.

When an interest is held for another or others, it may be said to be held in trust ownership; when held with another or others in concurrent ownership; when held after another or others, in future ownership; and when held subject to a proviso, in favour of another or others in conditional ownership.

SECTION I.

IN TRUST OWNERSHIP.

	PAGE		PAGE
Trust Ownership.....	91	Legal and Equitable Estates..	96
History of Trust Ownership..	92	Equity follows the Law.....	98
Creation of Trust	94	Devolution of Legal Estate ..	100
Description of Trust	95

Trust Ownership.—When the legal owner of lands or goods holds them either by voluntary undertaking on his part, or by construction of law, absolutely or partially for the benefit of another or others, he is, in so far as he so holds them, an owner of them on trust, and his property in them is what we have described as trust ownership.

History of Trust Ownership.—In speaking of limited interests in goods, we have already had occasion to describe the machinery by which trusts were made effective. A short sketch of their history and growth may now be given.

Trusts were preceded by what in old times were called uses. The main characteristic of uses was the same as the main characteristic of trusts, namely, the separation of the beneficial from the legal or technical ownership. This separation in the case of uses, as in the case of trusts, was brought about by the action of the Court of Chancery in recognizing that the legal owner of a thing might not be the person morally entitled to enjoy it. Wherever, in the opinion of the Chancellor, this distinction between the legal and the moral right to a thing arose, he interfered for the purpose of protecting and enforcing the moral right as against the legal.

Wherever this separation took place, the legal or technical ownership, which was the only ownership recognized in the Courts of Common Law, remained subject to all the rules and incidents of the common law. The beneficial ownership, which was the creature of the Court of Chancery, was relieved of all those rules and incidents as far as these appeared to the Court of Chancery unjust or inexpedient. Thus, fee simple land was not subject to its owner's last will at common law, but the Court of Chancery permitted the use of it to be devised; so conveyances of fee simple to a feoffee to uses—similar to the modern trustee—to the use of the grantor's will, became common. Again, land could not be given to a religious corporation, according to the common law as strengthened by various statutes; but the Court of Chancery permitted conveyances to be made to feoffees to the use of charitable and religious houses. Again, as we shall see, at common law the seisin of freehold land could never be without an owner; the Court of Chancery disregarded the whole doctrine of seisin as far as uses were concerned, and so introduced limitations of future estates unknown to the common law (see infra, p. 135), and at the same time revolutionized conveyancing by dispensing with the proceeding which was necessary at common law for the effective transfer of freehold lands, and which was known as livery of seisin.

This greater ease and freedom with which uses could be dealt with made the system so popular that, by Henry VIII.'s time, most of the land in England, it has been said, was held by its nominal owners on uses for the benefit of other persons who were practically the real owners. The uncertainty as to the real ownership of land to which this state of affairs gave rise, was regarded by the legislature as a serious evil, and an effort was made to end it. A statute, accordingly, was passed with the object of reuniting the legal and beneficial ownership in lands in the same person or persons. This statute, which is called the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, A.D. 1536), enacted that henceforth all lands in the seisin of a trustee for the benefit of another or others, should be held and considered to be in the seisin and possession of the person or persons for whose benefit they were held. The object of this enactment was to put the beneficial owner immediately into legal possession of any interest in lands which was held by anyone in trust for him.

The statute, however, from the first failed partially of its object. It referred merely to the case of a trustee being seised of lands for another's benefit. Now "seised," as has been already pointed out, applies only to freeholds. Accordingly, the statute did not apply to cases where a trustee was not seised—for instance, where he had vested in him merely a term of years. In the second place, it referred only to passive trusts—that is, trusts where the trustee's whole duty was to hold for the benefit of someone else—not to active trusts—that is, trusts where the trustee had some active duties to perform, as, for example, to manage the land, or to repair and maintain the mansion-house. Soon a decision of the Courts of Common Law (Tyrrell's Case, Dyer, 155a; Tudor's R. Pro. Cases) deprived the statute of any little effect it ever had. In this decision it was held that there could not be a second use limited upon a first use, and that if such a limitation were attempted the statute would vest the legal estate in the first cestui que use, as he was called, and the second use failed. For example, if Blackacre was conveyed to A. and his heirs, to the use of B. and his heirs, in trust for C. and his heirs, the fee simple in Blackacre would, by force of the statute, vest not in A., but in B., while the trust in favour of C. and his heirs, being a use upon a use, would fail, and C., who was the person intended to be benefited, would get nothing. Obviously, this construction frustrated the intentions of the grantor. Again the Chancellor interfered to prevent this result, and again passive uses of freehold lands became common. "Uses upon uses" of freehold lands henceforth were called "trusts."

The Statute of Uses had, as we shall see (infra, pp. 139, 205), an enormous effect upon our system of conveyancing, but ultimately it failed altogether to fulfil its real object—that is, to put an end to trusts of lands.

The statute did not apply when the trust estate consisted of leaseholds or goods. Trusts of these have always been enforced since the Chancellor's first interference. The modern system of trusts, however, both of land and goods, did not become settled altogether on its present basis till the Chancellorship of Lord Nottingham, tempore Charles II. (per Lord Mansfield, C.J., in Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 177).

Creation of a Trust.—The Court of Chancery now creates a trust, as it formerly created a use, in every case where, in its view, the legal and moral rights to a thing reside in different persons. This separation between the legal and moral right may arise through the express condition attached to the conveyance of the thing to the legal owner. Thus, goods may be assigned to A. with an express direction that he shall hold them in trust for B. This is what is called an express trust. But the separation between the legal and moral right may arise without any express condition. Such a condition may be inferred by the Court from circumstances attending the conveyance of the thing. For instance, if lands or goods be assigned to a person who gives no consideration for them—to a volunteer, as the phrase is—then, in the absence of anything to show that the giver intended to benefit the grantee, the Court will hold that the latter was intended to be and is merely a trustee for the former. This is an example of a resulting trust. Again, if a vendee pays the purchase-money to the vendor before the thing sold has been conveyed to him, then the vendor will be held a trustee for the vendee of the thing sold until conveyance of it is made. This is an example of a constructive trust.

Description of a Trust.—To the creation of an express private trust—that is, a trust for the benefit of an individual or of individuals, as opposed to a trust for a public or charitable purpose—three parties are necessary—the settlor, the trustee, and the cestui que trust. The settlor is the party who provides the property to be held in trust, and declares the purposes for which it is to be held. The trustee is the party who holds the property in trust, and who carries out the purposes for which it is held by him. The cestui que trust is the party for whose benefit the property is held in trust. The property held is called the trust property. The interest of the trustee is called the legal estate, and the interest of the cestui que trust is called the equitable estate.

For the sake of clearness, we have spoken here as if the different parties must be different individuals. But the same individual may fill two or, to a certain extent, all three characters. Thus, a person may declare himself trustee of his own property for his children. Here he fills the two characters of settlor and trustee. Again, a person may declare himself trustee of his own property for his own benefit for life, and then for his children. Here he, in a way, fills all three characters. Again, the different parties need not be single individuals. Indeed, in practice it is usual to appoint two or more persons joint trustees, and as a rule trust property is held for the benefit not of a single individual, but of a class or family of individuals.

Both in private and in public trusts—i. e., trusts for public purposes—the trustee may be, and sometimes is, not an individual, but a corporation; while in public trusts it frequently happens that there is no specific cestui que trust at all, as, for instance, when funds are left for the advancement of some public matter or interest, such as charity or education. In this case the place of cestui que trust is taken by the object of the trust.

Under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), the Court has now power on the application of a person creating or intending to create a trust, or of a trustee or cestui que trust, to appoint a judicial trustee, either jointly with any other trustee or as sole trustee, or if sufficient cause be shown, in place of all or any trustees (sect. 1 (1)). It may give such a trustee general or special directions in regard to the trust (sect. 1 (4)), and may order certain remuneration to be paid to him out of the trust estate (sect. 1 (5)), and the judicial trustee's accounts will each year be audited and a report upon them made to the Court by auditors appointed under the Act (sect. 1 (6)).

Legal and Equitable Estates.—When land or goods, then, are held in trust, there are two separate and distinct interests subsisting in them—the interest of the trustee and the interest of the cestui que trust. The former of these is the legal or technical ownership. A trustee is the legal owner of the trust property, and he can, and he only can, give a good legal title to it to a purchaser.

Moreover, he can legally sell or dispose of it to anyone he likes without the consent of the cestui que trust, and anyone who purchases from him for value, even although the sale constitutes a breach of trust, has a good title to the property, both at law and in equity, provided he did not know, or did not have reason to suspect, that the trustee in selling was committing a breach of trust. If the purchaser had notice of the breach, or if he did not give value, he will take the property subject to the trust, i. e., he will be only a trustee of the property. Of course, where a trustee sells in breach of trust, he is personally liable civilly, and, if the sale be fraudulent, criminally, too, for his act. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 80.) Moreover, until recently, there was no time limited by statute after which an action for breach of an express trust would not lie against a trustee. Now, however, by the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59, s. 8), roughly speaking, a limit of six years is fixed in all cases save where the breach of trust was due to the fraud of the trustee who seeks the protection of the act (Thorne v. Heard and Marsh, (1895) A. C. 495), or where the action is for property, or the proceeds of property, improperly retained by the trustee for his own use. In either of the latter cases the time within which the action may be brought is unlimited still, as far as statute is concerned, though, if the cestui que trust fails to take action for a long time after discovering the fraud or breach of trust, the Court may refuse to give him a remedy, on the ground that he has been guilty of laches or negligence. There is, of course, no limitation as to criminal proceedings, but the sanction of the Attorney or Solicitor-General, or of the judge of the Court where the civil proceedings, if any, were heard, is necessary before prosecution. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 80.)

A further power has been given to the Court to relieve a trustee guilty of a breach of trust by sect. 3 of the Judicial Trustee Act, 1896. By this enactment, if a trustee is personally liable for a breach of trust, but the Court is of opinion that he acted honestly and reasonably, and that he ought fairly to be excused, it may relieve him wholly or partially of his liability. This jurisdiction is intended to be used freely, but the Court must be satisfied that the trustee acted not merely honestly but also reasonably in the administration of the trust before it will interfere in his favour. (In re Turner, Barker v. Ivimey, (1897) 1 Ch. 536.) The jurisdiction extends to breaches of trust committed before as well as after the passing of the Act, and to ordinary as well as judicial trustees.

The interest of the cestui que trust, on the other hand, is, strictly speaking, not ownership at all. Practically, no doubt, it constitutes the real—that is, the beneficial—ownership; but, technically, it is, as between the cestui que trust and third persons, only a right against the trustee personally and any other person dealing with the property and aware of the trust. The trustee owns the land, but the Court compels him to use his ownership for the benefit of the cestui que trust, and if he refuses to do so, it will attach him for contempt, or will make an order removing him from his position as trustee.

At first, the tendency of the Court of Chancery seems to have been to regard the cestui que trust's interest for all purposes merely as a right of action against the trustee. (See Sir Moyle Finch's case, 4 Inst. 86.) Gradually, however, it came to be recognized in equity as property, and then the Court of Chancery treated it, as far as possible, as if it were ordinary property at common law. It permitted it to be dealt with in the same manner as the legal ownership could be dealt with—to be limited out in estates, to be alienated inter vivos, to be devised or bequeathed, and to descend to the heir or personal representatives. The principle observed was, and is, that in dealing with equitable interests equity follows the law.

Equity follows the Law.—The principle was, in some respects, applied very strictly, but, in others, relaxed or disregarded. Thus, the equitable estate in freehold lands was generally treated, as regards the estates that might be held in it, and as to their incidents and their devolution on death, almost precisely as if it were the legal ownership. It could be entailed or held in fee simple, and on death it went to the heir at common law, or, if the land itself was subject to a custom—such as gavelkind—to the customary heir. On the other hand, equitable interests in leaseholds and goods, while they were treated as personalty for purposes of entail and devolution on death—a fee tail could not be created in them, and on death of their owner intestate they went to his personal representatives—yet, as we have seen, they could be portioned out into limited interests, such as interests for life, and future interests, in a way the common law did not permit the legal ownership to be dealt with. Not only so, but, as we have also seen, by the doctrine of conversion, equitable interests in freehold lands are sometimes treated as if they were interests in goods, and interests in goods as if they were interests in freehold lands. (See supra, p. 88.)

These are not the only points on which equity does not observe its own principle of following the law. Thus, it disregards altogether the doctrine of seisin in regard to equitable interests in freehold land. Accordingly, such interests can be made to commence from a future time independently of the determination or not of previous freehold interests; while a fee simple in them can be made to shift over from one grantee to another on the happening of a given event. For the same reason, the old common law methods of transferring legal interests in land have no application to equitable interests in it. These latter are in their nature averable, that is, capable of being created by word of mouth, or parol, as it is called technically. And originally they could also be assigned or transferred from one owner to another by parol. Now by the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 10; Irish Act, 7 Will. III. c. 13), the declaration of trusts of land, that is, the creation of equitable interests in it, must be evidenced in writing, signed by the person entitled to declare the trust—the settlor—or his agent; and by sect. 9, assignments of equitable interests, whether in lands or goods, must be in writing signed by the party assigning them. That is sufficient, except in the case of an equitable estate in tail, which, under the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, s. 40), can be assigned only in the same manner as a legal estate in tail. A trust of goods may still be created by parol. (McFadden v. Jones, 1 Ph. 153.) In practice, as a rule, the same instruments are used to declare or assign equitable interests of all kinds as are used to grant or convey the corresponding legal interests.

Equitable interests in freeholds, as they were not the subject of tenure, were not liable to escheat, which is an incident of tenure. On the death of an equitable owner in fee simple intestate and without heirs, the trustee, as terre tenant, held the lands discharged from the trust, i.e., for his own benefit. (Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 177.) In a trust of goods, however, the Crown was entitled to the goods as bona vacantia, goods without an owner. And now by the Intestates' Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71, ss. 4 and 7), equitable interests in hereditaments, on the death of their owner intestate and without heirs, are also to go to the Crown. (See infra, p. 261.)

Devolution of Legal Estate.—The estate of the trustee was, as we have seen, the legal or technical ownership; and on the trustee's death it devolved according to its nature. If it were held by him jointly with other trustees, it survived to the surviving joint owners. If he were sole trustee, it went under his will; or, if he died intestate, it went, if realty, to his heir; if personalty, to his administrator; in every case it remained liable to the trust. Now, by sect. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), on the death of a sole trustee, the trust property, whether it be land or goods, and whether the trustee has attempted to devise or bequeath it to others or not, vests in the deceased trustee's personal representatives, that is, in his executors if he have made a will, in his administrators if he have not. And now by sect. 1 (1) of the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), in all cases every kind of realty, save copyholds, on the death of their owner, devolved in the first instance to their late owner's personal representatives precisely as if it were goods. (See infra, p. 262.)

SECTION II.

IN CONCURRENT OWNERSHIP.

	PAGE		PAGE
Concurrent Ownership	101	Sub-sect. 3. Tenancy in Common	115
Sub-sect. 1. Joint Tenancy ..	103	Sub-sect. 4. Tenancy by En-
Sub-sect. 2. Coparcenary	112	tireties	116

Concurrent Ownership.—Ownership is concurrent when it is vested in two or more persons at the same time. By person here is not necessarily meant an individual. An individual is, of course, a person, but a person frequently means two, four, a score, a hundred, or a thousand individuals taken together. Person, or persona, represents simply the legal unit, which may be an individual or may be any number of individuals so bound together that the law for its own, or for certain purposes, will regard them as a unit. A number of persons so bound together are said to be incorporated, and are called a corporation. (See infra, pp. 302, 330.) The individuals forming the corporation do not own concurrently things belonging to the corporation. Individually they have no ownership in such things whatever. The legal entity, called the corporation, owns them, and it owns them in severalty: that is, not in concurrent, but in exclusive ownership.

Concurrent ownership is divided into joint tenancy, coparcenary, tenancy in common, and tenancy by entirety. These different kinds of concurrent ownership differ from one another in many respects, as we shall presently see; but there is one point upon which they are all the same, and on which they differ from ownership in severalty—namely, land or goods owned in any form of concurrent ownership are owned in undivided shares. However much the concurrent owners differ as to the extent or duration of their interests in the thing owned, they each have joint possession of the whole of it and exclusive possession of no part of it. That is the cardinal distinction between all kinds of concurrent ownership and ownership in severalty. As between themselves, this point is to be noticed—that while all of them, save tenancy by entirety, may subsist equally in legal and equitable interests, only joint tenancy and tenancy in common can subsist equally in land and goods; coparcenary and tenancy by entirety subsist only in freehold lands.

It may here be added that, in the case of land or rent held in joint tenancy, tenancy in common, or coparcenary, the actual possession of, or receipt by one or more of concurrent owners of the entirety, or of more than his or their individual share or shares of the land, profits thereof, or rent, for his or their own benefit, or for the benefit of others than the person entitled thereto, is not to be deemed the possession of or receipt by the other concurrent owners. (Limitation Act, s. 12, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27; Ward v. Ward, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 789.) This provision, as we shall see, is very important as affecting title by long possession. (See infra, p. 255.)

SUB-SECTION 1.

JOINT TENANCY.

	PAGE		PAGE
Characteristics of Joint Tenancy	103	Severance at Law ..	108
Fourfold Unity	103	Severance in Equity	110
Right of Survivorship	105	User of Joint Estate	111
Severance of Joint Tenancy ..	107	Trustees Joint Tenants	112

Characteristics.—Joint tenancy, whether in land or in goods, always arises by the act of the parties, and never by operation of law, that is, always through an actual gift, grant, or agreement, and never through the descent or devolution of the thing owned on the death of the owner intestate. A grant or bequest to "A. and B." without more, or to "A. and B. jointly," or to "A. and B. during their joint lives," or in any other similar terms, will create a joint tenancy. However it arises, its chief characteristics are what are called its fourfold unity and the right of survivorship.

Fourfold Unity.—The fourfold unity consists of unity of title, unity of time, unity of interest and unity of possession.

By unity of title is meant that the interest of all the joint tenants must arise under the same instrument or out of the same act. For example, if A. gave a joint interest with himself in Blackacre to B., and subsequently transferred his (A.'s) joint interest to C., B. and C. would not be joint tenants, as B.'s title would arise under the first, and C.'s under the second grant. In such a case B. and C. would hold as tenants in common as we shall shortly see.

By unity of time is meant that the interests of all the joint tenants must come into existence at one and the same time. (Co. Litt. 188.) Thus, for example, property cannot be given directly (inter vivos at any rate) to A. till he marries, and then to him and his wife jointly, because here A.'s interest would come into existence immediately after the gift, while his wife's would arise later (on her marriage). This rule, however, does not apply to grants made by way of a use or trust (see infra, p. 139), or to gifts made by will.

Thus, in the case of freeholds, a grant, for example, to A. and his heirs to the use of B. and his heirs till B. marries, and then to the use of him and his wife and their heirs jointly, will confer a joint estate on A. and his future wife from their marriage. This estate will, in consequence of the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. VIII. c. 10), be an estate at law. A gift of goods to trustees in trusts similar to these uses will likewise create a joint tenancy in A. and his future wife from their marriage; but here the joint interest will be equitable.

Again, a gift by will to A. for life, and in case she has children to them as joint tenants on her death, creates a good joint tenancy in A.'s children. On birth each child will take a joint interest in the property subject to be partially divested to let in other children born later. (Kenworthy v. Ward, 11 Ha. 196.)

By unity of interest is meant that the share of each joint owner in the joint ownership must be identical. Thus one joint tenant cannot be entitled to greater rights over the thing owned than any other joint tenant, to use it differently, or obtain a larger share of the income arising out of it. As long as the joint ownership continues the rights of each joint owner as joint owner must be the same.

One joint tenant, however, may have rights of ownership in the thing owned over and above those he possesses jointly with others. For example, if the interest held jointly be a life estate he may have the reversion in the joint estate in fee simple in severalty, or if he have an estate for life in severalty, that may be followed by a remainder in fee held by him jointly with others.

It is sometimes said that by unity of interests is meant that the interest of each joint tenant must be of the same duration; ex. gr., one tenant's interest could not be a life estate and another an estate for years. (Co. Litt. 188.) This no doubt is so, since a joint tenancy means an interest held jointly, and here there are (not an interest held jointly, but) two distinct and different interests.

At common law corporations cannot be joint tenants either with an individual or between themselves. Thus a limitation to two corporations jointly makes them not joint tenants but tenants in common. (Co. Litt. 190a.)

By unity of possession is meant that all joint tenants have an equal right to the possession of the thing jointly owned. It follows, as a corollary from this, that no particular joint tenant is entitled to exclusive possession of any part of the thing jointly owned. This is what is meant by the old maxim that joint tenants of freeholds are seized per my et per tout, of none and of all, not, as Blackstone (2 Bl. Com. 181) says, "of half and of all." (Co. Litt. 186a.)

Right of Survivorship.—The most important characteristic of joint tenancy is the right of survivorship, or jus accrescendi. When an interest in land or goods is limited to two or more persons jointly, the joint tenants are regarded as one proprietor, and as each tenant dies the whole estate survives to the surviving tenant or tenants until only one tenant remains, who then becomes owner of the interest in severalty. The surviving tenant or tenants are entitled to the whole joint interest on a fellow joint tenant's death, regardless of any devise or bequest of his share which he may have made by his will, or of any rentcharge upon the joint interest which he may have granted during his life, or of any claims of creditors for debts due by him, or of any claim by his widow for dower or jointure, or if the deceased tenant were a woman, of her husband's right to an estate by the curtesy. (See infra, p. 262.)

This right of survivorship makes it impossible to limit an estate in tail general in joint tenancy. When freehold land is limited to A. and B. and the heirs of their bodies, the estates that will result depends on whether A. and B. (being unmarried man and woman) are or are not capable of lawful marriage. If they are not capable of marrying—as if they are brother and sister—then they will have a joint estate for life with inheritances in tail in common. If they are capable of marrying, they will take a joint inheritance in special tail. On a limitation to A., B., and C. in fee simple, or of goods to A., B., and C. simply, the survivor takes the whole property absolutely.¹

Of course in every case the right of survivorship obtains only if the joint estate is actually subsisting at the death in question. If severance, as it is called, has taken place, from that moment the joint estate is destroyed, and with it the right of survivorship among the joint tenants.

It is a rule, partly recognized in law and fully recognized in equity, that for the benefit of commerce the right of survivorship does not obtain among partners as to property held by them in joint ownership for partnership purposes. (Lake v. Gibson, 1 Eq. Cas. Ab. 294; 1 W. & T.) By the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), “partnership” is defined as the relationship subsisting between two or more persons carrying on a common business with a view to profit (sect. 1), and “partnership property” as all property, rights and interests originally brought into the common stock or acquired on account of the firm or in the course of the common business. (Sect. 20.) Property purchased with partnership money is (until the contrary appears) to be deemed to be acquired on account of the firm.

¹ Limitations of joint tenancies are frequently made to the grantees and the survivor of them. In the case of life estate, these latter words are mere surplusage, and do not affect the interests given. In the case of fees simple, however, they alter the limitation from a joint estate in fee simple to a joint estate for lives, with a contingent remainder in fee simple to the survivor. (Quarm v. Quarm, (1892) 1 Q. B. 184.)

(Sect. 21.) Land which has become partnership property is converted—that is theoretically changed into personalty—as between the partners, their heirs and executors. (Sect. 22.) On the decease of a partner all the partnership property survives to the surviving partner or partners, who, however, hold it, subject to the partnership agreement, for the benefit of the deceased partner's executors or administrators after payment of the partnership debts. The right, however, of the executor or administrator is not to any specific part or share of the partnership property, but merely to the value of such share, after all proper deductions. This right gives rise merely to a debt against the surviving partners, who are not in any sense trustees of the deceased partner's share for the benefit of his personal representatives.

Severance of Joint Tenancy.—When the fourfold unity, which, as we have seen, characterizes joint tenancy, is broken in upon, the joint estate is destroyed, and those who were before joint tenants hold henceforth either as tenants in common or tenants in severalty, according as the property remains in their common possession, or is divided up among them. The joint estate is then said to be severed.

When joint tenants for life sever, each takes a tenancy in severalty or in common for his own life in his share. As there is no right of survivorship between tenants in common, on the death of one tenant his share goes to the person entitled in reversion, even though the other tenants are living. If the joint tenancy had continued the reversioner could not have entered upon any part of the property till the death of the last surviving of the joint tenants. Accordingly, severance in such a case is an advantage to the reversioner, and a corresponding disadvantage to the joint tenants. (Co. Litt. 252.)

Severance may be either legal or equitable. Where the severance is legal, the joint estate is for all purposes at an end. Where the severance is merely equitable, only the beneficial interest is severed, the legal estate remaining unaffected.

Severance at Law.—A joint tenancy, where the joint tenants are beneficial owners, may be severed either (a) by a partition of the joint estate, or (b) by alienation by one of the joint tenants of his undivided share.

(a) By partition is meant the dividing up of the joint estate among the joint tenants, who henceforth hold their individual shares in severalty.

At common law one joint tenant was not entitled to claim a partition against the wishes of the other joint tenants. This rule still prevails as to goods held in joint ownership, and so no partition can take place as to them except by the consent of all the joint tenants. (Litt. 290.) As to land, however, besides partition by consent, partition may be obtained under the Partition Acts (31 Hen. VIII. c. 1; 32 Hen. VIII. c. 32; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 40; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 17), by any joint tenant without the consent of his co-tenants, by application to the Chancery Division in England, or the Chancery Division or the Landed Estates Court in Ireland, or if the property in question does not exceed 500*l.* in value, by application to the County Court.

Whether the partition takes place by agreement between the joint tenants or by decree of the Court, the joint tenants must mutually convey to one another their allotted shares. This conveyance must be by deed (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), and by way not of grant but of release. (See infra, p. 205.) The conveyance should be by release because before partition each tenant was in possession and owner of the whole. When, however, a partition by agreement is made through the Land Commissioners (which is the usual and cheapest method), no conveyances of any kind are necessary.

By sects. 3 and 4 of the Partition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 40, amended by 39 & 40 Vict. c. 17), the Court has power to decree a sale with division of the proceeds instead of a partition. The power under sect. 3 is absolutely discretionary, and may be exercised by the Court if it thinks a sale would be beneficial, on the request of anyone interested in the joint estate. Sect. 4, on the other hand, gives parties interested to the extent of a moiety a right to demand a sale instead of a partition unless the Court sees good reason for refusing it. (Drinkwater v. Ratcliffe, L. R. 20 Eq. 528.) The Court may decree sale of part of the joint estate, and partition of the rest. (Roebuck v. Chadebet, L. R. 8 Eq. 127.) If a joint tenant who has taken out a summons to partition dies before order made, there is no severance (In re Wilks, Child v. Bulmer, (1891) 3 Ch. 59), and consequently the whole estate survives to the surviving joint tenants.

(b) Alienation by a joint tenant of his undivided share of the joint property, whether that property be land or goods, causes severance of the joint tenancy. The severance here, however, is not so complete as in the case of partition, since the joint tenants do not become owners in severalty, but owners in common. (See infra, p. 115.) If there are more than two joint tenants, and one only alienates, this alienation will not sever the joint tenancy as between the other tenants. These will continue to hold, as between themselves, in joint tenancy; while as between them and the grantee of the alienated share they will hold as tenants in common. (Co. Litt. 189a.)

An actual conveyance of a joint tenant's share is not necessary to sever the joint tenancy as to it, even at law. Thus, a covenant to settle the covenantor's share in the joint estate will be sufficient to cause severance (Burnaby v. Equitable Reversion Interest Society, 28 Ch. D. 416), whether such covenant was made after or before the joint tenancy arose. (In re Hewitt, Hewitt v. Hallett, (1894) 1 Ch. 362.) Marriage, again, of a female joint tenant was, before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, sufficient to cause severance, at any rate, when it acted as a transfer of the wife's interest, or a share in it, to the husband, but since that Act it has no such effect. (Palmer v. Rich, (1897) 1 Ch. 134. See pp. 263, 325.)

Severance of joint tenancies in land may also be brought about by merger. Thus, if A. and B. are joint life tenants of Blackacre, and the reversion in fee descends upon A., A.'s life tenancy will merge in the fee, and A. and B.'s interests becoming unequal, the joint tenancy will come to an end. If the reversion had been limited to A. in the same deed or instrument as created the joint estate, there would have been no merger. (2 Bl. Com. 186.)

Severance in Equity.—In consequence of the right of survivorship, which, as we have seen, is incidental to joint ownership, and which equity regards as unfair, equity, as the phrase is, leans against joint tenancies. In the language of Lord Cowper, L. Ch., equity regards them as "odious." (York v. Stone, 1 Salk. 158.) An example of that leaning has been seen already in the case of partnership property. In the same way, on a joint purchase of land, if the purchase-money be advanced by the purchasers in unequal proportions, though they will be joint tenants in law, yet in equity they will be tenants in common. (Lake v. Craddock, 2 P. Wms. 158; 1 W. & T.) And in the case of mortgages, whether the mortgagees advanced the mortgage money equally or unequally, they will in equity be held tenants in common of the mortgage debt, unless the mortgage deed expressly provides that they are to be joint tenants in law and in equity. (In re Jackson, 34 Ch. D. 732.)

Again, in the case of gifts by will to a number or class of persons, though if there be nothing to indicate an intention that the individual devisees or legatees are to take separate interests, equity will regard them as joint tenants, yet it will take advantage of the slightest indication of such an intention to hold them to be tenants in common. Thus, a gift "between," "among," "to be divided between," a certain class will in equity make the gift a gift in tenancy in common. Words of this kind are called "words of severance." (Attorney-General v. Fletcher, L. R. 13 Eq. 128.)

Again, any agreement between the joint tenants that the joint tenancy is at an end will determine it in equity, but no mere declaration by one joint tenant to which the other joint tenants were in no sense parties will have that effect. (In re Wilkes, Child v. Bulmer, (1891) 3 Ch. 59.)

User of the Joint Estate.—Joint tenants, as between themselves, are entitled to make what use they like of the thing jointly owned, subject to these two limitations: that no tenant shall oust, or deprive of possession, any other tenant of the whole or any part of the joint estate; and that no tenant shall commit voluntary, or at any rate, destructive waste of the joint property. As between themselves, they certainly are not liable for mere permissive waste; and if one joint tenant spends money in repairs of the common property, he cannot, during the continuance of the joint tenancy, recover a share of his expenditure from the other joint tenants, unless he had express or implied authority from them to expend the money, or unless the repairs were absolutely necessary for the preservation of the property itself (Leigh v. Dickeson, 15 Q. B. D. 60), though on a sale or partition of the joint estate the Court will allow him a part of such expenditure in proportion to the extent to which it has increased the value of the shares of the estate of the other joint tenants. (In re Jones, Farrington v. Forrester, (1893) 2 Ch. 461, at p. 476; In re Cook's Mortgage, Lawledge v. Tyndale, (1896) 1 Ch. 923.) A joint tenant is liable for voluntary waste (Statute of Westminster the Second, 13 Ed. I. c. 22), but when that waste consists in the proper working of the estate, it would seem he is liable only to the extent of rendering an account to his co-tenants of the profits resulting therefrom, and appropriating to his own use no more than his proper share of these. (Job v. Potton, L. R. 20 Eq. 84.) Under the Judicature Act, 1873 (sect. 34, sub-sect. 3), an order for such account can be obtained in the Chancery Division. (See 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 27.)

Trustees Joint Tenants.—Trustees are always made joint tenants of the trust estate. This is because the right of survivorship, which, as we have seen, is an incident of joint tenancy, prevents complications, and saves expense on the death of one of several trustees by vesting the whole trust property in the remaining trustees without any act on the part of any one. If the trust property had been held in any other way, the deceased trustee must have devised or bequeathed his share in it to the other trustees, or a reconveyance from the trustee's heir or personal representatives would have been necessary.

SUB-SECTION 2.

COPARCENARY.

	PAGE		PAGE
Characteristics of Coparcen-		Severance	114
ary	112	User	114

Characteristics.—When two or more persons take an estate as together constituting the heir (Co. Litt. 163) of its deceased owner, they hold that estate in coparcenary, and they themselves are called coparceners, or more shortly parceners. Two points are to be noted in this definition. In the first, as coparcenary is grounded on heirship, it can only arise by descent, and it can only subsist in estates of inheritance. It cannot, therefore, be created by grant, or subsist over goods, on both of which points it differs from joint tenancy and, as we shall see, tenancy in common.

Two or more persons may constitute a single heir either:—

- (a) Under the common law, where, through the absence of males, females, or the issue of females, inherit. For example, A., an owner of fee simple lands, dies intestate, leaving no sons and five daughters; the five daughters will inherit the lands together as his heir. And if one or more daughters were dead, leaving issue, that issue would take their mother's share in coparcenary with the surviving daughters. In the same way, where any class of female relatives, as sister, aunts, cousins, or their representatives succeed as one heir, they are coparceners of the descended estate. (See infra, p. 269.)
- (b) Under special customs, which make all the males of a certain class a single heir; as gavelkind, for instance, where all the sons succeed together. (See infra, p. 270.)

As regards the unities, coparcenary is characterised by unity of possession and unity of title—derivation by descent from the same ancestor. There is, however, no unity of interest. The shares of the coparceners may be from the first unequal. Taking the example already given, if B.—one of A.'s five daughters—was dead, at his decease leaving no son, but three daughters, these three daughters would be coparceners with their four aunts, but they would have between them only their mother's share: that is, each of them would only have a fifteenth share, while their aunts would each have a fifth share of the whole estate. Nor is there any unity of time. If one of the four aunts in the last example died intestate after her father's death, her share, if she left issue, would descend to them in coparcenary with the other coparceners; if she left no issue, it would go in coparcenary among the other coparceners.

As there is no unity of interest, there is no right of survivorship in coparcenary. As already indicated, interests in coparcenary on the death of their owner intestate descend precisely as do interests in severalty.

Severance.—As in joint tenancy, severance will result from partition of the whole estate or alienation by one coparcener of her share. In the latter case, the incoming tenant holds as tenant in common with the other coparceners.

The right of one coparcener to claim a partition of the common property exists at common law. Littleton enumerates four methods by which partition could be made:— (1) By agreement between the parceners, each to take a determinate part of the land. (2) Partition by a friend, each parcener choosing her share according to age. (3) Partition by the eldest parcener, who then is the last to choose her share. (4) Partition by lot. (Litt. s. 243 to s. 264.) Some things, however, were not at common law partitionable, such as the mansion-house of the estate. The oldest parcener had a right to it on making compensation to the others, or they all could have it in turns. (Co. Litt. 164.) However, now the Partition Act, 1868, with its provisions as to sales in lieu of partition, applies to interests in coparcenary as well as to joint tenancies. Formerly, a partition might be made by parol agreement among the coparceners, but now a deed is necessary. (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3.) Further, on the alienation by one coparcener of her share to another coparcener, she can convey it either by release, as in the case of a joint tenancy, or by ordinary conveyance, as in the case of a tenancy in common.

User.—Coparceners are practically in the same position, as to user, waste, and repairs, as other concurrent owners.

SUB-SECTION 3.

TENANCY IN COMMON.

	PAGE		PAGE
Characteristics of Tenancy in		Severance	116
Common	115	User of Estate in Common ..	116

Characteristics of Tenancy in Common.—Like joint tenancy, tenancy in common, whether in land or goods, never arises by inheritance from an ancestor. The three most usual ways in which it arises are—(a) by express limitation, as “to A. and B. as tenants in common,” or by the gift of an undivided share of an estate or fund, as “to A. the half of my farm of Blackacre” (Co. Litt. § 299); (b) by severance without partition of a joint tenancy or a coparcenary (Litt. § 309); (c) by construction of law, as in the case of a limitation to A. and B. (brother and sister) and the heirs of their bodies jointly; here, as we have seen, A. and B. hold joint estates for life with estates in tail in common in remainder. Where in a gift joint at law there is a severance in equity, the legal estate remains joint, while the equitable estate becomes a tenancy in common.¹

Of the four unities which characterise joint tenancy, only one exists in the case of tenancy in common—unity of possession. Tenants in common need not claim under the same instrument or act, they need not have equal undivided shares of the estate in common, and their interests need not have been created at the same time. Neither is there any right of survivorship attached to their interests: on the death of a tenant in common his interest in the common estate is subject to his will, and if he dies intestate it descends to his real or personal representatives according to its nature and tenure precisely as if it were held in severalty.

¹ Blackstone sums up the different modes in which a tenancy in common may arise very tersely: “Tenancy in common may be created either by the destruction of the two other estates, in joint tenancy and coparcenary, or by special limitation in a deed.” (2 Bl. Com. 191.) The bearing of the last three words is not very clear. A tenancy in common may be limited in a will, or any other instrument capable of conveying the property.

Severance.—As in tenancy in common the only unity which exists is unity of possession, it follows that the only severance which can take place is by partition of the estate in common.

The various Partition Acts already referred to apply to tenancy in common equally with joint tenancy. It is only necessary here to add that, in case of a partition, whether voluntary or under the Partition Act, 1868, and whether between the original tenants in common or between some of them and the grantees of the others, the mutual conveyances of the allotted shares should be not by release, but by ordinary conveyance. This is because, though the possession is joint, their interests are several. (Co. Litt. 200 b.)

User of Estate in Common.—Practically the rights of a tenant in common over the estate in common are the same as those of a joint tenant over the joint estate. And the same is the case as to waste and repairs.

SUB-SECTION 4.

TENANCY BY ENTIRETIES.

	PAGE		PAGE
Characteristics.....	116	Married Women's Property
		Act, 1882	117

Characteristics.—When a legal estate of freehold was granted or devised to a man and his wife in terms which would have made them joint tenants of it had they not been man and wife, they, as long as they remained man and wife, held it not as joint tenants, but as tenants by entireties. Divorce, it would seem, changed the tenancy by entireties into an ordinary joint tenancy. (Thornley v. Thornley, (1893) 2 Ch. 229.)

Tenancy by entireties is founded on the old common law doctrine that husband and wife are in law only one person. This rendered it impossible for them to be joint tenants. (2 Bl. Com. 181.) And it also accounts for the peculiar characteristics of tenancy by entireties. Thus, each tenant by entireties is seised of the entirety of the estate—that is per tout, but not per my. Either tenant is unable, during the coverture, to dispose of the estate, or of any part of it, save with the concurrence of the other (Doe d. Freestone v. Parratt, 5 T. R. 652) and if it be not disposed of during their joint lives, it survives, like a joint estate, to the survivor. During the coverture, the husband is entitled to the whole rents and profits.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882.—It seems certain that, since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a grant to a husband and wife, not expressly as tenants by entireties, but merely in terms which, had the grantees not been husband and wife, would have made them joint tenants, will now make them simply joint tenants. The wife will, in such case, be entitled to a moiety of the rents and profits for her separate use, and to an account as against the husband. (Thornley v. Thornley, supra.) Whether, however, a grant to them expressly as tenants by entireties would not still create a good tenancy by entireties is doubtful. (See Re Jupp, Jupp v. Buckwell, 39 Ch. D. 148.) The unity of the husband and wife is still recognized to this extent, that in grants to husband and wife and a third person as joint tenants, in the absence of anything in the instrument to the contrary, the husband and wife together take only a moiety between them. (Re Jupp, supra.)

SECTION III.

IN FUTURE OWNERSHIP.

	PAGE		PAGE
Future Ownership	118	Sub-sect. 3. Under Statute	139
Sub-sect. 1. At Common Law ..	118	4. Powers	146
2. In Equity	135	5. Perpetuities and Accumulations ..	154

Future Ownership.—When a person's interest or share of the ownership in a thing is preceded by another interest or share of the ownership vested in some one else, the former person's interest is future or in expectancy. Some such future interests existed at common law; others, again, were the creation of the Court of Chancery; while others owe their origin, at least as legal as opposed to equitable interests, to statute.

SUB-SECTION 1.

FUTURE OWNERSHIP AT COMMON LAW.

	PAGE		PAGE
No future Interests in Goods .	118	Kinds of Future Estates	126
Future Interests in Land	119	Reversions	127
Rule of Limitation	122	Remainders	129
Rule of Construction	124	Failure of Contingent Re- mainders	132

No Future Interests in Goods.—Future ownership, in the sense in which we have defined it, can subsist only in things the ownership of which is capable at law of being divided up among different persons in succession. Now at common law, as we have seen, the ownership of goods could not be so divided up; consequently at common law there could be no future interests in goods. On the other hand, the common law permitted the ownership of land to be divided up into periods of duration. Accordingly, at common law there could be future interests in land. And furthermore, when the ownership of land was divided up, all the interests or estates so created, save the one in actual enjoyment, were necessarily future in their nature.

Future Interests in Land.—It is important to remember what we have already referred to—that at common law freehold interests are the only interests which were, or for that matter are, regarded as proprietary interests in land. Fee simple is the full ownership of the land as far as full ownership of land can exist: fees tail and life estates are parts of the ownership. But at common law terms of years or leases for fixed periods are not regarded as proprietary interests at all; they are mere matters of contract between the owner of the land and the occupier of it. Accordingly, all future interests at common law are necessarily freehold interests, and in limiting them no attention is paid to the existence or non-existence of terms of years or other chattel interests.¹

Now it is a doctrine of the common law that all freehold interests are present rights. The owner of an interest in possession has obviously a present right; but the owner of an interest in expectancy is also regarded as having a present right, though it is only a present right to future enjoyment. This doctrine is peculiar to English law. Other systems of law adopt the view of the civil law, namely, that in the case of successive owners the owner of the interest in possession has in him the total ownership for the time being, and the owners of the interests in expectancy have no ownership in them whatever until their interests come into possession. In other words, ownership in civil law is looked upon as a single right which cannot be divided between a number of persons in succession, though it may be made to shift from one person to another on the happening of a certain event; while in English law, as far as land is concerned, ownership is regarded as a sort of thing owned in itself which may be divided up between different persons in succession, each of whom, though he may have no present right to the land itself, yet enjoys a present right to his share of the ownership of it. (Markby's Elements of Law, 4th ed. p. 163.)

¹ It is, perhaps, worth noting that the first example given by Blackstone of a future interest at common law is at common law not a future interest at all, but a fee simple in possession. (Bl. Com. 164.) Nothing shows better the immense service rendered to English law by Fearne in making clear the principles upon which future estates are limited than a perusal of the sixteen pages in which Blackstone treats of remainders, reversions and executory interests.

A present right which is at present vested in no one is a contradiction in terms, and as all freehold interests in land are present rights, it follows that they must have present owners. This consideration was formerly held to preclude the limitation of present or future interests to unborn or unascertained persons, since the interests arising under such a limitation must necessarily be without owners until the persons to whom they are limited are born or ascertained. Gradually, however, this view was relaxed. Limitations of future estates to unborn or unascertained grantees were permitted, but such limitations were regarded as creating no present interest in the land, but merely a chance or possibility of future interests. If the grantees were born or ascertained before or at the period when the future interests were to become interests in possession, they took effect as valid grants; if, however, the grantees were not then born or ascertained, they failed altogether, and the next interest which had present owners came into possession precisely as if the interests to the unborn or unascertained grantees had never been limited. Until the grantees were born or ascertained, the whole ownership or fee simple of the land was made up of the interest in possession and the interests in expectancy which had ascertained owners. Thus, for example, in a limitation to A. for life, then to A.'s eldest son (unborn) in fee tail, with remainder to B. in fee simple, the whole ownership resides in A. and B. until A.'s eldest son comes into existence, when the fee tail, until then ownerless, and therefore not an interest, but merely a possibility of an interest, in the land, vests in him and becomes a real interest. It may be noticed in this connection that a child en ventre sa mère is regarded now as in existence so as to prevent the failure of an estate limited to it through the determination of the preceding estates before its birth. Formerly the rule was that a child en ventre sa mère was regarded as in existence for the purpose of inheritance, but not for the purpose of purchase. (Reeves v. Long, 1 Salk. 227.) This rule was altered, however, by the Statute for the Relief of Posthumous Children (10 & 11 Will. III. c. 16).

Future interests in land, then, can be limited now to unborn or unascertained persons. The generality of this statement, however, must be restricted by what is called the rule against double possibilities.¹ This rule (which might perhaps be more accurately described as a rule against too great remoteness of limitation) may be thus stated: The limitation of a future interest in land to the child or other issue, or to the heir, of a person unborn at the date of the settlement is invalid. (Cholmley's case, 2 Rep. 50.) In other words, the power to limit interests to unborn persons is confined to limitations to unborn persons of the next generation, and the power to limit interests to unascertained persons extends only to persons who shall at latest be ascertained during the life of persons of the next generation. (Whitby v. Mitchell, 44 Ch. D. 85.)

¹ The rule against double possibilities—potentia propinqua and potentia remotissima—was not confined to this specific case. For example, Blackstone, following Lord Coke, gives as other examples of its operation, that it makes void grants to unborn bastards, and to unborn children of particular names, ex. gr., as "to my daughter's son Geoffrey." (2 Rep. 51b.) As to the first of these, it might be held bad on another ground—as contrary to public policy; and as to the second, if it would now-a-days be bad at all, it would be because it is a gift to a specified person, when, as a fact, no such person exists. (Pres. Abst. 128.) Probably the rule—as far as it ever had any existence in practice—was merely an attempt to lay down a rule restricting the creation of future estates before the principles controlling the limitation of these were definitely settled.

Rule of Limitation.—Limitations to unborn or unascertained persons not being estates or interests in the land, their allowance does not repeal the old rule that freehold interests in land, whether in possession or in expectancy, are present rights, and, as such, must have owners. The old rule, accordingly, is still good; and therefore, as the freehold interests in possession and in expectancy in any plot of land constitute together the whole ownership of it, it follows that every part of the ownership must have an owner. This is what is meant by the maxim that the seisin of land—that is, the full or freehold ownership of it—must never be without an owner. Any limitation which transgresses this rule is, from its inception, void as to the part of the ownership not provided by it with an owner, and all subsequent limitations.

Now part of the ownership of land may be without an owner owing to either of these causes. In the first place, an immediate freehold interest may be created without an owner. For example, an immediate freehold may be limited to an unborn person, as, for instance, by a grant by deed of a life interest to the eldest son of A., A. having at the date of the grant no son. Such a limitation would fail, and so would all subsequent interests limited in succession to it, whether those interests were provided with owners or not. In the second place, the freehold interests granted may not exhaust the whole ownership covered by the limitation, or, in other words, there may be a period preceding the first freehold interest granted, or periods between the different freehold interests granted. For example, a life estate may be granted to A. to commence from the end of next year. Now here the part of the ownership covered by the limitation extends from the date of the grant to the death of A., but of this, the part from the date of the grant up to the end of next year is without an owner. It might be argued that the ownership till then would remain in the grantor, but this was rendered impossible by the old law of conveyance which made the livery of the seisin necessary to the transfer of a freehold interest. (See p. 203.) That livery of the seisin took the seisin out of the grantor at once, and if it did not vest in the grantee till the end of the next year, obviously it was till then without an owner. And it would be without an owner even if a lease had been granted to a third person till the end of next year, because as such a lease was not a freehold interest, it did not carry with it the seisin of the land. In the same way, if an interval is left between one freehold interest and another, the limitation as to that interval and the subsequent freehold is void from its inception. For example, if in the last case the limitation had been an immediate life estate to A., and then to B. for one year, and afterwards to C. in fee, the limitation to B. and C. would be void from the first. During the year after A.'s death the freehold would have no owner; consequently, to prevent this, the law declared the limitation void as from the death of A. In other words, the ownership of land is permitted by the common law to be divided up only into freehold interests; and freehold interests created by a limitation must be consecutive in order fully to exhaust the ownership or the part of the ownership covered by the limitation.

Accordingly, in creating future freeholds at common law, the following rule must be remembered:—A future freehold interest must be limited to commence immediately on the determination of a precedent freehold interest, and if it be limited to commence on any other event or contingency, the limitation is void from its inception. (5 Rep. 94 b.)

Freeholds limited to commence on any other event than the determination of a prior freehold are said to be limited in futuro.

Rule of Construction.—The old doctrine of the common law, that every freehold interest in land, whether in possession or expectancy, must at its inception have a certain and existing owner, led to the establishment of a rule of construction, which still applies to all limitations of freeholds, whether at common law, by will, or by way of use. That rule is called the Rule in Shelley's Case, from its being reported in a famous case of that name in Lord Coke's Reports. It will be best explained by an example.

Take a limitation to A. for life and afterwards to his heirs, or to the heirs of his body. Now, originally, if this limitation had been held to mean a life estate to A., and nothing more, and after the determination of his life estate a fee to whomsoever should then be his heir or his heir of the body, then as the "heirs," or "the heirs of the body," were uncertain, and, perhaps, not born at the date of the grant, and must remain uncertain until A.'s death (as there can be no heir-at-law to a living person), the grant to them would have been void. To prevent this the Courts held that, under such a limitation, the heirs or heirs of the body were not grantees at all, and that the words were used in the grant merely to mark out what estate A. was to take, whether fee simple or fee tail—that is, the words "heirs," or "heirs of the body," were mere words of limitation, and the words "for life and afterwards" were mere surplusage. Not only so, but it was held that the interposing of other freehold interests between the grant to A. for life and the subsequent fee granted to his heirs, or the heirs of the body, made no difference in the construction—that still A. took both the life estate given to himself, and the remainder given to his heirs or his heirs of the body, and that the latter were not grantees at all.

All this is summed up in the rule laid down in Shelley's Case. That rule is usually stated thus:—When an ancestor by any gift or conveyance takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited either mediately or immediately to his heirs in fee or tail, the words "heirs" or "heirs of the body" are words of limitation of the estate of the ancestor. (1 Rep. 104a.)

Taking the rule as thus stated, the following points should be marked. In the first place, the first estate mentioned must be to the ancestor to whose heirs the subsequent fee is given. If the limitation were to A. for life, and afterwards to the heirs of B., the rule would not apply. The heirs of B. would here take the subsequent estate as purchasers—that is, as grantees under the deed. In the second place, the estate limited to the ancestor must be one of freehold. If a term of years be granted to A., and on its determination a fee simple is given to his heirs—which would be a good limitation if made by will or by way of use (see infra, p. 139)—there the rule would not apply. On the determination of the lease, A.'s heirs, if A. were then dead, would take as purchasers. In the third place, the grants to the ancestor and to his heirs must be contained in the same instrument. If the life estate to A. were given by a deed of grant, for instance, and the subsequent fee to his heirs were given by will or by a later deed, the rule would not apply: A's heirs would again take as purchasers on the death of A. In the fourth place, the second gift may follow the first immediately or mediately—that is, consecutively or with an intervening grant or intervening grants. An instance of this has been already given. In the fifth place, the second gift must be to the "heirs," or "heirs of the body," of the ancestor. No other words will come within the rule, save in the case of a will, when under certain circumstances "issue" has been held to be equivalent to heirs of the body. If, for instance, after a life estate to A., the fee were limited to A.'s "eldest son," or his "children," or his "grandchildren," the rule would not apply: the fee would vest in the person or classes described as purchaser or purchasers.

Two points are to be noted further. In the first place, the addition of words of inheritance in the limitation of the fee to the "heirs," or "heirs of the body," does not prevent the application of the rule, provided the heirs described in the words of inheritance are of the same kind as the "heirs," or "heirs of the body," to whom the fee is limited. Thus a limitation to A. for life, and then to the heirs of A. and their heirs, would vest a fee simple in A.; but a limitation to A. for life, and then to the heir of A. and the heirs of the body of such heir, would give A. only a life estate, and there would be a contingent remainder in tail given to A.'s heir. Again, where the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply, a grant to a person's "heirs," or "heirs of the body," will vest in them a fee simple or fee tail without additional words of inheritance. Thus, a limitation to A. for life, and afterwards to the heirs of B., would vest in B.'s heir a fee simple in remainder. In case, however, B.'s heir, after succeeding to the estate, died possessed of it intestate, the person who would inherit would be not his heir, but the heir of his ancestor B. (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, s. 4.)

Kinds of Future Estates.—Future interests at common law are primarily divided into Reversions and Remainders. A future interest is a reversion when it is the residue of the original estate out of which the precedent interest or interests were granted; it is a remainder when it is an interest granted out of the original estate at the same time as, but in succession to, the precedent interests. (Co. Litt. 142 a.) Thus, if A., an owner in fee simple, grant B. a life estate, the fee simple in expectancy remaining in A. after the grant is the reversion on B.'s life estate. B.'s estate is called the particular estate. If A., by the same instrument, had granted a further life estate to C., to vest in possession on B.'s death, then C.'s interest would have been merely a remainder on B.'s, while the fee simple in expectancy remaining in A. would have been the reversion on both B. and C.'s life interests, the immediate reversion as to C.'s, the ultimate reversion as to B.'s.

The same future interest may be a reversion as to some precedent interests and a remainder as to others. Thus, if A., an owner in fee simple, grants B. a life estate, and by the same instrument grants C. the fee simple in expectancy on B.'s life estate, C.'s fee simple is a remainder as to B.'s life estate. This is because C.'s fee simple is not the residue of the original estate, but a fresh interest created by the same grant as that creating B.'s life interest. If C. subsequently granted a life estate to D., to vest in possession on B.'s death, then C.'s fee simple in expectancy would be a remainder as to B.'s life estate and a reversion as to D.'s. (1 Prest. Est. 123.)

If, in the above instance, C.'s original fee simple, instead of being granted by the same instrument as B.'s life interest, had been granted by a subsequent instrument, then it would have been the reversion on B.'s life interest, since on the grant of B.'s interest the residue left in A. was the reversion, and its subsequent transfer to C. would not change its nature.

Reversions.—The most important point to be noticed about reversions is that there is a relation of tenure between the owner of the reversion—the reversioner as he is called—and the owner of the precedent interest or particular estate. In other words, the latter holds from, or is the tenant of, the former. And the usual incidents of tenure attach to this relationship. What those incidents are we have already pointed out in the previous part of this work. (See supra, p. 23.)

A reversion, as it did not entitle the reversioner to the possession of the land, was regarded as an incorporeal hereditament, and was therefore always alienable by grant. (See supra, p. 8.) If a rent was reserved on the particular estate, a grant of the reversion carried the rent with it without its being mentioned in the grant. (Co. Litt. 151, 152.) As rent was an incident of the reversion, the right to it was destroyed by anything which destroyed the reversion itself. The most usual mode by which a reversion was destroyed during the continuance of the particular estate was by its merger in a larger interest. (See supra, p. 71.) Now, by sect. 9 of the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), when a reversion expectant on a lease of any tenements or hereditaments of any tenure shall be surrendered or merge, the estate which shall for the time being confer as against the tenant under the same lease the next vested right to the same tenements or hereditaments, shall, to the extent and for the purpose of preserving such incidents to and obligations on the same reversion, as but for the surrender or merger thereof would have subsisted, be deemed the reversion expectant on the same lease.

It may be remembered that, strictly speaking, there is no reversion on a term of years. The grant of a term of years does not take the freehold out of the grantor, and so at common law he is regarded during its continuance as owner in possession through his lessee. Frequently, however, a lease for years amounts practically to the beneficial ownership of the land for the time being, and in such cases it is customary to talk of freeholds being in reversion on terms of years.

It may be added that common law—as far as it recognised such interests in land—regarded chattel interests as goods (see supra, p. 66), and therefore incapable of being limited to various persons in succession, yet it freely permitted a lessee to create sub-leases—that is, leases for shorter periods than that for which the lessor himself held. The effect of this was to leave in the sub-lessor an interest in the head lease similar to a common law reversion. This interest is usually called a quasi reversion on the sub-lease, or simply a reversion.

Remainders.—A remainder being simply a grant to take effect in possession on the determination of the particular estate, there is no relation of tenure between the owner of it, or remainderman, as he is called, and the owner of the particular estate. The latter does not hold of the former as the owner of a particular estate holds of the reversioner. Both particular estate and remainder come from the same source—the original estate of their grantor; and both are held of the grantor, unless he has, by his grant, divested himself of all his estate in the land, in which case they are held of his superior lord, or, if he had not a superior lord, then of the Crown as lord paramount. (See supra, p. 32.)

Remainders are either vested or contingent. A vested remainder is a remainder of the more ancient kind, that is, one the owner of which is living and ascertained, and which is an actual estate in the land, complete in interest though deferred to the precedent estate in enjoyment. Being complete, it is ready, and must continue ready, from its commencement as a vested remainder till its expiration in natural course, to come into possession immediately on the determination of the preceding interest, the existence of which is the only thing which prevents it being complete not merely in interest, but also in enjoyment. It is true it may fail, or, rather, determine before the period arrives, when it would vest in possession, but such determination must arise from its own natural expiration, not from any outside event or contingency. Thus, take a limitation to A. for life and then to B. for life—B. being a living person. If B. predeceases A., his life estate will never become an interest in possession; but as long as B. lives, his estate is ready to come into possession the moment A.'s life estate determines.

Contingent remainders are themselves of two kinds.¹ The first kind are those which are contingent, because they have no owners. The second kind are those which are contingent, because whether they will ever give rise to estates or not depends on a future event or contingency. Neither kind are complete estates in the land, or, indeed, estates at all; as has been said already, they are mere possibilities of future estates. Both kinds are marked by this characteristic which distinguishes them from vested remainders. They are not ready from their commencement to vest in possession on the determination of the preceding estates, or, if so ready at their commencement, they may, before their natural expiration, cease to be ready.

Examples of the first kind of contingent remainders—those which are contingent because they have no owners—occur in the cases already mentioned of limitations to unborn or unascertained persons. Thus, in a limitation to A. for life, and then to his eldest son in tail—A. having, at the date of the settlement, no son—the remainder to the eldest son has no owner till A. has a son born to him. Until then, that remainder is not ready to come into possession. In the same way, in a limitation to A. for life, and then to the heirs of B., B. being a living person—the remainder to B.'s heir has no owner until B. dies. (Nemo est hæres viventis.) Only then can B.'s heir be ascertained, and, accordingly, till then the remainder is not ready to come into possession.

Examples of the second kind of contingent remainders—those which are contingent, because whether they will give rise to estates or not depends on a future event or contingency—occur in the cases of limitations of future estates subject to a certain event happening or not happening during the continuance of the precedent estates. Thus, in a limitation to A. for life, and then to B. in tail, provided C.—a person living at the date of the settlement—be not then living, the remainder to B. is not ready to come into possession until C. dies, and if C. does not die before A. it fails altogether. Again, in a limitation to A. for life, and then to B. in tail, provided C. be then living, the remainder to B. is ready from its commencement, and as long as C. lives, to come into possession on the determination of the particular estate, but it may not continue so ready till its natural determination. The natural determination of B.'s remainder would be the death of B. and the failure of his issue, but its readiness to come into possession, and, indeed, the remainder itself, would be brought to an end at any time by C. predeceasing A. If the limitation had been to A. for life, and then to B. in tail, provided B. be then living, B.'s remainder would still have been contingent, since the natural determination of B.'s remainder would be not B.'s death merely, but the failure of his issue also, and the readiness of B.'s remainder to come into possession, and, indeed, the remainder itself, would be liable to come to an end on the death of B. before A., though B. left issue living at his decease. On the other hand, if in this limitation the remainder given to B. had been a mere life estate, it would have been vested, since then, during the continuation of the estate till its natural determination, i.e., A.'s death, it must have continued ready to come into possession immediately on the determination of A.'s life estate.

¹ Fearne gives a more exhaustive classification of contingent remainders into four kinds. The above is intended merely to draw attention to the primary and radical division, which it is of importance the student should clearly apprehend.

The chief difference between these two kinds of contingent remainders lies in the fact that the first kind, as long as they remain contingent, cannot have, while the second kind may have, an ascertained owner. The first kind are contingent, because they have no existing, or if, perchance, existing, no ascertained owner; the moment they have such an owner they cease to be contingent. The second kind are contingent because they are limited upon a future uncertain event; until that event happens they must remain contingent whether they have—as they usually have—living and ascertained owners or not. This fact, however, does not make them estates in the land. Like the first kind of contingent remainders, the second kind are mere possibilities of future estates, and as such their owner could not alienate them at common law, though he might release them to the reversioner or remainderman. He could, however, alienate them in equity, and now, by the Wills Act (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 3), he can devise them, and by the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 6), he can alienate them by deed. Neither does the existence of an owner make them less liable than ownerless contingent remainders to fail should the prior estate in the land determine before they are ready, or after they have ceased to be ready, to come into possession. All contingent remainders must become estates, as distinguished from mere possibilities of estates, either during the continuance of the preceding estate, or immediately on its determination. This is a rule which applies equally to all kinds of contingent remainders at common law.

Failure of Contingent Remainders.—Now the determination of the preceding estate might arise through its natural expiration, or it might be brought about artificially. It might be brought about artificially in various ways. Thus, the owner of the preceding estate might do something which would cause a forfeiture of the life estate, as by levying a fine or suffering a recovery, or by conveying the fee simple tortiously. (1 Rep. 66.) Or he might surrender his interest to the first owner of a vested remainder of inheritance, or he might purchase the first vested remainder of inheritance. In either of these cases, if there was no vested interest between the particular estate and the vested fee in remainder, there was nothing to keep them separate, and therefore the particular estate—if it were less than a fee—merged in the fee in remainder, and was thereby determined and destroyed. The existence of contingent remainders between the particular estate and the vested remainder of inheritance was not sufficient to keep them separate and so prevent merger, as contingent remainders were not estates in the land. Vested interests only, as has already been pointed out, are estates or parts of the ownership, and accordingly, when the vested interest preceding contingent remainders, and the vested fee immediately succeeding them, come in any way to be held by the same person, that person holds the freehold in possession, and the fee immediately in remainder upon it. There is thus nothing to prevent the operation of the rule that where two estates are owned by the same person at the same time, the smaller is merged in the larger.

To prevent the contingent remainders failing through the artificial and premature determination of the preceding freeholds, it was formerly customary to grant in all settlements an estate to trustees, which was to arise on the premature determination of the particular estate and to continue until such period as it would have expired in natural course. Such estates to preserve contingent remainders, as they were called, are now rendered unnecessary by the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 8, which enacts that a contingent remainder existing at any time after 31st December, 1844, shall be, and if created before the passing of the act shall be deemed to have been, capable of taking effect notwithstanding the determination by forfeiture, surrender or merger, of any preceding estate of freehold, in the same manner in all respects as if such determination had not happened.

There were other modes in which the destruction of contingent remainders might have been brought about by the premature destruction of the particular estate; but these have now all become impossible owing to other changes in the law, and we need not here mention them.

The liability of contingent remainders to destruction by the natural expiration of the particular estate or preceding interests has also been practically abolished for the future by the 40 & 41 Vict. c. 33. This enactment leaves contingent remainders arising under instruments executed before 2nd August, 1877, still liable to destruction through the natural determination of the preceding interests before such contingent remainders have become vested; but as to contingent remainders arising under instruments executed since that date, it abolishes such liability provided the contingent remainders are created in conformity with the rules governing the creation of executory interests.

What these rules are we shall shortly see. (See p. 137, infra.) But one of them—the only one of any importance in this connection—must be mentioned here, that is what is called the rule against perpetuities. It prevents the creation of any executory interest which may not vest in possession within a life or lives in being and twenty-one years after. (Infra, p. 155.) Accordingly, in a limitation to A. for life, and afterwards to the first son of A.'s who attained the age of twenty-six, the limitation over to A.'s son would be a contingent remainder not created in conformity with the rules governing the creation of executory interests. It would, therefore, receive no benefit from the 40 & 41 Vict. c. 33. If, when A. died, no son of his had attained the age of twenty-six, the contingent remainder would fail. (Abbiss v. Burney, 17 Ch. D. 211; Symes v. Symes, (1896) 1 Ch. 272.)

SUB-SECTION 2.

FUTURE OWNERSHIP IN EQUITY.

	PAGE		PAGE
Equity and the Legal Estate..	135	Absolute Interest after Absolute Interest.....	137
Equitable Future Interests in Goods	136	Equitable Reversions and Remainders	138
Equitable Interests need not have Owner	136

Equity and the Legal Estate.—With respect to the limitation of future interests in lands, where both the legal and equitable interests were dealt with in the limitation, it may be said broadly that equity never attempted, directly or indirectly, to interfere. If any such limitation failed at law through its violation of the rules of the common law, the Court of Chancery did not endeavour, by the creation of a trust, or in any other way, to render it effectual in equity. But where an instrument dealt only with the equitable interest as separate and distinct from the legal estate in the land, or where it dealt with goods, there the Court of Chancery permitted future interests to be created on different principles from those which, at common law, regulated the creation of future interests. Thus if land were conveyed to persons on limitations not recognized by the common law, these limitations failed, and the grantees under them had no claim to the land, either at law or in equity. But if land or goods were conveyed to persons on limitations good at common law, and these persons were directed to hold the land or goods for the benefit of other persons on limitations not recognized by the common law, very often equity would enforce these limitations. Or if the grantor had in him only the equitable interest in the land or goods—as, for example, if he were himself a cestui que trust, in which case, as we have seen, the legal estate in the trust property would be in the trustees of the settlement—he might convey that equitable interest on limitations very different from those recognized by the common law.

Equitable future Interests in Goods.—The first point on which equity differed from the common law as to the creation of future interests has already been, perhaps, sufficiently referred to. (See supra, p. 85.) Equity permitted the ownership of goods to be parcelled out among various persons in succession. Of course all such partial interests, save the one in possession, were future. Equity then permitted the creation of future interests in goods, at least as freely as the common law permitted their creation in land.

Equitable Interest need not have Owner.—The second point on which equity differed from the common law is, as to the need of owners for all existing interests. The common law, as we have seen, insisted that all interests, present or future, should have existing and ascertained owners, and contingent remainders were permitted only on the ground that they were not interests at all, but merely possibilities of interests. Equity, on the other hand, did not insist on the equitable interest, whether in land or in goods, and whether in possession or in reversion, having an existing and ascertained owner. The equitable ownership of land or goods might be in abeyance, and to whom it would ultimately belong might depend on a contingency, or on the future decision of some person or persons.

As, then, equity did not require that every equitable interest should have an owner, it follows that the common law rule of limitation, which resulted from that doctrine, did not apply to equitable ownership. A future equitable interest need not be limited to commence on the determination of a precedent equitable interest, and if it be limited to commence on any other event or contingency, the limitation is not necessarily void from its inception. In other words, limitations in futuro of equitable interests are not ipso facto void. Thus a limitation of an equitable interest in land or goods to the first son of A., a bachelor, who shall attain the age of twenty-one is good. Here there may be no owner of the equitable interest in the land or goods for twenty-one years or more after the date of the gift. Until a son of A.'s attains the age of twenty-one, the gift is contingent. Again, a limitation of an equitable interest to A. for life, and after A.'s death to such children of his as shall be alive twenty-one years after A.'s death, is good. Here the gift to A. is immediate, but there must be an interval between the determination of A.'s interest and the vesting of the future interest in his children. That, however, will not render void the limitation in their favour. Again, a limitation to A. for life, and then to such person or persons as A. may by deed or will appoint, is good. Here the future absolute interest has no owner until A. appoints one. If A. dies without making any appointment, then, unless there is a gift over to some one else on default of appointment, the equitable interest results to the settlor, or, if he be dead, to his real or personal representatives, according as the property is land or goods.

Absolute Interest after Absolute Interest.—The third point on which equity differed from the common law was as to the limitation of one absolute interest after another. As has been pointed out, at common law a fee simple could not be followed by any other interest. Even if the fee simple limited was a determinable fee, nothing remained in the grantor after parting with it but a possibility of reverter, which, like other possibilities, was not an estate in the land, and could not be assigned by deed or will. But equity had no such rule as this. It permitted further interests to be limited after a fee simple equitable in land or the absolute equitable interest in goods, provided the fee simple or the absolute interest was given subject to a contingency which might determine it. The only restriction upon this power lay in that imposed on it by the rule which prevented the creation of perpetuities. (See infra, p. 154.) Thus, a limitation of the equitable ownership of fee simple land to A. and his heirs until A. shall marry, and then to him for life, and subject thereto, to the eldest son of the marriage in fee tail, is good. And in the same way, a limitation of the absolute equitable interest in goods to A.—an infant—but should A. die before attaining the age of twenty-one and without issue, then to B., is good. The latter limitation constantly occurs in settlements of leaseholds or goods to accompany freeholds. (See Christie v. Gosling, L. R. 1 E. & I. App. 279.)

Equitable Reversions and Remainders.—While equity thus permitted future interests of a different kind, and limited in a different way from those recognized by the common law, yet it did not prevent the creation of equitable reversions and remainders. When the equitable interest in freehold land was limited in such a way as if, had the interest dealt with been the legal estate, the future interests resulting would have been good reversions or remainders at common law, then the equitable interests resulting were regarded as equitable reversions or remainders. These equitable reversions and remainders had the same incidents and characteristics as reversions and remainders at common law, with this exception: equitable contingent remainders were not liable to fail through the determination of the particular estate before they were ready to vest. (Astley v. Micklethwait, 15 Ch. D. 59; Fearne's Contingent Remainders, p. 304.) This is usually explained by saying that the contingent remainder is prevented from failing by the existence of the legal estate in the trustees or mortgagees, or in whomsoever it may reside. This is, however, only another way of saying what has been said above—that, as far as equitable interests are concerned, equity does not insist that an interest in them in possession or in expectancy shall have an existing owner. (See supra, p. 136.)

SUB-SECTION 3.

FUTURE OWNERSHIP UNDER STATUTE.

	PAGE		PAGE
Statutory Future Interests ..	139	Rule of Construction	142
History of Executory Interests.	139	Kinds of Executory Interests.	144

Statutory Future Interests.—The third kind of future interests are those arising, directly or indirectly, under or by virtue of certain statutes. These statutory future interests are called executory interests. The rules regulating their creation are practically the same as those regulating the creation of future interests in equity. Executory interests, however, are not merely equitable interests: they are, by force of the statutes in question, legal interests also; that is, they give the grantee not merely the beneficial ownership in the thing they subsist in, but also the legal title to it.

History of Executory Interests.—Executory interests owe their origin to the old system of uses. In uses, as in trusts, as we have seen, the whole ownership of land was divided into two parts—the legal or technical ownership, and the beneficial ownership or use; and the Court of Chancery permitted the latter—just as it subsequently did in the case of trusts—to be dealt with free from the more harassing rules of the common law. Practically, we may assume for present purposes that the beneficial interest in land under a use could be limited in the same way as the equitable interest under a trust can now be limited.

This was the state of affairs when the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. VIII. c. 10) was passed. That statute, as we have seen, was intended to put an end to the separation of the beneficial interest in land from the legal or technical ownership. It attempted to do this, however, not by preventing the future creation of uses, but by ordaining that the legal ownership of the land should always follow the use. Consequently, uses could be created just as before—that is, on the same principles as apply to future equitable interests—and the moment such uses arose, the Statute of Uses clothed them with the legal estate. The effect of this was that henceforth future legal estates in land, provided they were not limited directly to the grantees but by way of use to them, could be created without regard to the common law rule of limitation. Thus, a grant of land to A. and his heirs from the end of the current year was bad as creating a fee simple to commence in futuro; but if the grant were to B. and his heirs (B. giving no consideration) from the execution of the grant, to the use of A. and his heirs, from the end of the current year, it would be perfectly good. Before the Statute of Uses, B. would have held the legal estate in the land as feoffee to uses. These uses would have been, in the first place, a resulting use to the grantor till the end of the current year (see supra, p. 95), and then to the use of A. and his heirs. The effect of the statute, however, was to take this legal estate out of him, and make it vest in the persons for the time being entitled to the use of the land. Accordingly, the grantor had, under such a settlement, the legal and beneficial ownership of the land until the end of the year, when it shifted over from him to the next cestuis que use—A. and his heirs. The feoffee to uses, then, was changed by the statute from a trustee into a mere conduit-pipe—as he has been called—for conveying to the cestuis que use their respective interests in the land.

Two points in this connection should be remembered. In the first place, as has been pointed out, the statute only applies where the feoffee to uses has been granted a freehold interest in the land. In the second place, it only applies to passive feoffees to uses—to feoffees who have no active duties to perform in carrying out the use. Where they have active duties, the statute does not take the legal estate out of them. They are, in such cases, not called feoffees to uses, but trustees.

Another effect of the Statute of Uses was to put an end to the power of devising land. As has already been pointed out, land was originally not devisable at common law, but the Chancellor made it practically devisable by permitting the creation of feoffments to the use of the grantor's will. The Statute of Uses, by turning the uses into legal estates, rendered them subject once more to the common law rule. Statutes were, however, soon afterwards passed to prevent this undesired effect. These were the Statutes of Wills (32 Hen. VIII. c. 1 ; 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 5), which made freehold land capable of being devised at law. (See infra, p. 227.) The Courts of Common Law, in applying this statute, adopted the practice of the Court of Chancery. The latter had allowed testators, as it had allowed other settlers, to create future interests in the use of land, without regard to the common law rules of limitation. The Courts of Law now allowed the legal estate to be devised in the same way as the Court of Chancery had permitted the use to be devised. Accordingly, the Statutes of Wills indirectly resulted, as to grants of land by will (as the Statute of Uses directly resulted as to grants of land by deed), in making it possible to limit future legal estates in land on the principles applicable previously only to the use or equitable interest in the land.

Two points of difference between executory interests arising under deeds and those arising under wills may be noticed. In the first place, executory interests under deeds, to take effect as such, must be limited not directly to the grantees, but by way of use. Executory interests under wills, on the other hand, take effect as such, whether they are limited directly or by way of use. Thus, to give by deed a freehold in futuro to A., the limitation should be "to B. and his heirs to the use of A." for life or in fee from the given date (see supra, p. 140) ; but a limitation by will "to A." for life or in fee from the given date would be sufficient. In the second place, executory interests under deeds can only be created in freehold land. This is due to the fact that the Statute of Uses applies only to freeholds. On the other hand, executory interests arising under wills may be created in freeholds, leaseholds, or even in chattels. Thus, if a lease for a hundred years be left to A. for life, and afterwards to B., on the executor's assent to the legacy (see infra, p. 231), A. will take not a mere equitable, but also the legal, estate in the term subject to the executory limitation over to B., and on A.'s death the legal and equitable interest in the term will immediately vest in B. or his assigns. (Lampet's Case, 10 Rep. 46.) This extension of the principles of equitable limitations to future interests in personalty arising under wills was made by the Courts of Law to prevent the defeat of the intentions of testators who might be compelled to make their wills without legal assistance.

Rule of Construction.—Executory interests being interests unknown to the ancient common law, the Common Law Courts have always regarded them with a certain disfavour. This disfavour caused the adoption of the rule that no future interest, though limited by way of use, or arising under a will, is to be regarded as an executory interest unless at its inception it is not reasonably possible to consider it a vested or contingent remainder. In other words, no future interests are to be held executory interests unless they are limited in a manner not recognized by the common law rules of limitation. Thus, future interests in goods or leaseholds arising under wills are executory interests, because the common law did not permit the creation of future interests in goods or leaseholds. Interests in freehold lands limited by way of use or under wills, to commence in futuro, or interests in fee limited in the same way to follow determinable interests in fee, are executory interests, because such limitations are unknown to the common law. But where the limitations set out by way of use or under a will are such as might have been validly created at common law, then they must be held to be common law limitations. (Re Lechmere and Lloyd, 18 Ch. D. 524.)

Thus, all future freehold interests in land which, at their inception, have a preceding freehold interest to support them—that is, are not to commence in futuro—are, under this rule of construction, vested or contingent remainders, and subject to all the common law incidents characteristic of such interests. One of the most important of these is, as we have seen, the liability of contingent remainders to fail in case they are not ready to vest in possession the moment the preceding estate determines. This liability to failure frequently led to fantastic results, and also caused the frustration of the intentions of testators. Thus, a testator left to A. a life interest in land, and then the fee simple to the first son of A.'s who attained twenty-one. If A. predeceased the testator, then, unless A. had left a son of twenty-one, the future interest to A.'s son would be an interest limited to commence in futuro, and therefore an executory interest which would arise on a son of A.'s attaining twenty-one. But if A. outlived the testator, then the future interest to A.'s son would, until A. had a son of twenty-one, be a future freehold interest with a preceding freehold interest in possession to support it, and, therefore, at common law, a contingent remainder; and, accordingly, if A. died before a son of his attained twenty-one, it would, by the common law rule, fail altogether.¹ To prevent such hardships as these, and also to prevent the failure of contingent remainders generally (see supra, p. 134), an Act to Amend the Law as to Contingent Remainders (40 & 41 Vict. c. 33) was passed. This act provides that every contingent remainder created by any instrument executed after the passing of the act (2nd August, 1877), or by any will or codicil revived or republished by any will or codicil executed after that date, in tenements or hereditaments of any tenure, which would have been valid as a springing or shifting use or executory devise or other limitation, had it not had a sufficient estate to support it as a contingent remainder, shall, in the event of the particular estate determining before the contingent remainder vests, be capable of taking effect in all respects as if the contingent remainder had originally been created as a springing or shifting use in a deed, or executory devise in a will, without being preceded by any particular estate of freehold.

¹ It would be different, however, if the will showed that the testator contemplated an interval between the determination of the life estate and the vesting of the fee. Thus, in a limitation to A. for life, and after his death among such of his children who in his lifetime, or after his death, attained twenty-one, in fee simple, the joint fee simple would be an executory devise. (In re Lechmere and Lloyd, 18 Ch. D. 524; Dean v. Dean, (1891) 3 Ch. 150.)

This statute puts future legal interests limited in a deed by way of use or arising under a will in all respects save one (see supra, p. 134) in the same position as future equitable interests. Whether they are executory interests, that is, are limited in such a way as would render them invalid in their inception if they were subject to the common law rules of limitation, or whether they are vested or contingent remainders, that is, are limited in such a way as they might have been validly limited at common law, they are not to fail through the non-existence or premature determination of a preceding estate of freehold. It may be added that in practice all future interests in freehold land arising under deeds are now limited by way of use, while, of course, all arising under wills are within the statute.

Kinds of Executory Interests.—Executory interests arising under a deed, and, therefore, by virtue of the Statute of Uses, are called, according to their nature, springing or shifting uses. Executory interests in freehold land arising under wills, and, therefore, by virtue of the Statute of Wills, are called executory devises; while executory interests in leaseholds and personalty arising under wills are called executory bequests.

By a shifting use is meant a future estate which, by coming into existence, defeats a preceding estate limited by the same instrument. For example, if a fee simple be limited to C. to the use of A. and his heirs, but should B., a bachelor, marry, then to the use of B. and his heirs, the use to B. and his heirs would be a shifting use, since its coming into existence as a legal estate must determine the fee simple granted to A. and his heirs. A springing use, on the other hand, is a future estate which is limited to come into existence at some future time without any estate being limited to precede it. For example, in a limitation of a freehold interest to B. to the use of A. from the beginning of next year, the use to A. would be a springing use. Till the end of the year, the instrument creating the use would have no practical operation. It is true the ownership of the land would be technically transferred by it to B., but as B. gave no value for it, he would be merely a feoffee to uses. The first use would be a resulting use to the grantor till the end of the year, and then an express use would arise in favour of A. The effect of the Statute of Uses on this would be that the grantor's interest, legal and equitable, would continue undisturbed till the end of the year, when it would go over to A.

Executory devises may be divided into the same classes as executory uses, in which case the classes are called shifting devises and springing devises. Executory bequests can be similarly divided too; but many executory bequests are rather in the nature of remainders, though owing to the fact that the things in which they subsist are not such as common law remainders can subsist in, they are executory interests. Thus, in a bequest of a term of years to A. for life, and then to B. absolutely, the interest of B. is neither a springing nor a shifting bequest, and yet it is an executory interest. It is usually described as a quasi-remainder, or, more shortly, a remainder.

SUB-SECTION 4.

POWERS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Nature of Powers	146	Execution of Powers	150
Kinds of Powers	146	Extinction of Powers	152
Special and General Powers ..	147	Powers of Revocation	153
Creation of Powers	150

Nature of Powers.—Under the head of future ownership may be most conveniently discussed what are known as powers. Yet a power can scarcely be considered the ownership, or a part of the ownership of the thing over which it subsists, since as long as it remains merely a power it confers no right to share in the possession, or use of it either in the present or in the future. It is rather one of the rights into which ownership is divisible—the right of disposition—separated from the other rights. (See supra, p. 13.) In other words, it is not an interest in the thing, but an authority to create an interest or interests. The interest or interests to be created under it will, of course, be future interests in the sense that they will arise some time after the grant of the power or authority to create them. The person who gives the authority to create future interests is called the donor, the person to whom it is given, the donee of the power.

Kinds of Powers.—Powers may be divided into two classes—common law powers, and powers operating by way of trust or use.

Common law powers consist of common law powers, strictly so called, such as the authority to sell his lands which a testator sometimes gives his executors without devising those lands or any interest in them to the executors (Dean v. Dean, (1891) 3 Ch. 150); and statutory powers, such as the authority given by the Settled Land Act, 1882, to a tenant for life to sell or lease the settled lands.

Powers operating by way of trust or use are powers to declare the trusts or uses of the thing over which they subsist, or, in other words, they consist in an authority to dispose of the beneficial interest in the thing. They are equitable powers when the legal estate does not follow the beneficial interest. They are legal powers when the legal estate does follow the beneficial interest. This happens when the use declared under the power is executed by the Statute of Uses. As we know, that statute applies only where a freehold interest in land is vested in the feoffee to uses. When this is the case, the power is simply an authority to declare executory interests in the land. Where the thing over which the power subsists is leasehold land or goods, then the power is merely an authority to declare equitable interests which the trustees must recognize.

Powers arising by way of uses or trust, are most commonly found in marriage settlements. Examples of those arising by way of use are powers of jointuring the wife of the tenant for life out of the settled land, and powers of selling or mortgaging part of the settled land for the purpose of raising portions for the younger children of the marriage. Examples of those arising by way of trust, are powers of appointing the funds within the marriage settlement among the children of the marriage, and powers of appointing portions of the settled funds for their advancement or education.

Special and General Powers.—Powers, however arising, are commonly divided into general powers and special powers, according as the authority enjoyed by the donee of the power is to appoint practically to anyone (including the donee himself), or to appoint to a special person or class of persons. (In re Byron's Settlement, Williams v. Mitchell, (1891) 3 Ch. 474.)

A general power of appointment—unless when it is subject to a trust—is practically equivalent to the ownership of the thing over which it subsists, since the donee can at any moment make himself the actual owner by appointing to himself. It is so regarded by the legislature, which in several statutes has treated property over which a person has a general power of appointment as part of his estate. Thus, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, any land over which a judgment debtor has "any disposing power which he might without the assent of any other person exercise for his own benefit," may be taken under a writ of elegit. Again, on the bankruptcy of the donee of a general power, the power vests in his trustee in bankruptcy, who can exercise it for the benefit of his creditors. (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, ss. 44 and 56.) And by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, on the death of a donee of a general power, if that general power be executed by his will, the property appointed becomes assets for the payment of the deceased appointor's debts. By sect. 4 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), this provision is extended to the wills of married women. By sect. 27 of the Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), a general gift of land or goods in a will is to include all land or goods over which the testator had a general power of appointment. By sect. 1 (2) of the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), real estate over which a person executes by will a general power of appointment is, as if it were real estate vested in him, to devolve in the first instance in his real representative constituted under that Act. (See infra, p. 231.) By sect. 1 of the Infants' Settlement Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43), an infant, if a male, over the age of twenty, and, if a female, over the age of seventeen, can, with the consent of the Court, exercise a general power of appointment for the purpose of settling the property over which it subsists in view of marriage. And by sect. 2 of the same act, such appointment is not void on the death of the infant under twenty-one, unless the infant was tenant in tail. (See In re Scott, Scott v. Hanbury, (1891) 1 Ch. 298.)

Special powers of appointment, on the other hand, generally amount less to the beneficial ownership of the thing over which they subsist, than to a discretionary authority which the donee of the power may, if he like, exercise in favour of the person or persons who are the objects of the power.

As we have seen, special powers are powers to appoint to a particular person or among a particular class of persons. A power to jointure the donee's wife may be regarded as an example of the first kind of special power. A power to appoint among the children of the donee may be regarded as an example of the second and more common kind. Powers of this latter kind are usually inserted in marriage settlements, more especially where the settled funds were originally the property of the wife. Roughly, the trusts in such settlements generally are as follows: The trustees are directed to pay the income of the trust funds to the wife for her separate use without power of anticipation (see p. 320) during her life; should she predecease her husband, then the income is to be paid to him during his life; on the death of both husband and wife, the trustees are to hold the trust funds for the benefit of the children of the wedding in such shares as the husband and wife jointly, or the survivor of them, shall appoint, and in default of appointment to the children in equal shares.

Now formerly, in the case of powers to appoint among a certain class, unless the authority given was to appoint to any or all of them—when the power was called exclusive—the donee had to appoint to each member of the class a substantial share, or the appointment would be bad in equity as illusory. At law it was a sufficient execution of these non-exclusive powers if some share, however small, was given to each member. By Act to Alter and Amend the Law as to Illusory Appointments (11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 46), passed at the suggestion of Lord St. Leonards, the legal rule as to non-exclusive powers was made to prevail over the rule of equity, and henceforth an appointment was good both in law and equity, however small the shares appointed to some members of the class, provided a share was appointed to every one of them. This state of the law has been again altered as to appointments made after the passing of the act (30th July, 1874), by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 37, which practically makes all powers exclusive—that is, gives the donee of the power the right to appoint to one or several members of the class only, excluding altogether the others. As the law now stands, the donee is not bound to appoint a particular or any portion to each member, save only where the instrument creating the power expressly fixes the portion to be appointed to each or any member. (Sect. 2, supra.)

Usually, in the case of special powers, there is a clause in the instrument creating them declaring that, in default of appointment, the property over which the power subsists shall go to the class among whom it may be appointed in equal shares. But even if such a clause be absent, the Court will imply it where any indication can be gathered from the instrument that it was the settlor's or testator's intention that the gift was for the benefit of the class, and that the donee of the power was merely to have an authority to decide what portion each of such class should take. Where, however, there is no indication of any such intention, no gift to or trust for the class can be implied. (In Re Weekes' Settlement, (1897) 1 Ch. 289.)

Creation of Powers.—No formal words are necessary in order to grant or reserve powers. All that is necessary is that the grant or reservation should be made clear. And any power granted is presumed to apply to the whole interest of the grantor in the thing over which it is granted, unless a contrary intention is expressed.

Execution of Powers.—In order that the appointment may be valid, the donee in executing the power must strictly observe all the formalities required by the instrument creating it. Thus, if the consent of a second person be required by the instrument, that consent must be obtained. If the power is to be executed by deed, it cannot be validly executed by will, and vice versa. Formerly, if the instrument required that the deed or will appointing should be executed with certain formalities—such, for example, as attestation by three witnesses—these formalities had to be strictly observed; but now it is sufficient if the deed or will, in such cases, be executed and attested by two witnesses as deeds and wills usually are executed and attested. (As to deeds, see 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 12; as to wills, 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 10.) If, however, the instrument, without specifying the power to be exerciseable by will, declared that it must be executed by a writing “signed, sealed and delivered,” then, in order to execute it validly by will, the will must be “signed, sealed and delivered,” notwithstanding the Wills Act. (Taylor v. Meads, 34 L. J. Ch. 203; Smith v. Adkins, L. R. 14 Eq. 402.)

Where there is a defect of a formal character merely in the execution of the power, the Court of Chancery will sometimes treat the execution as good. This is what is called aiding a defective appointment. The Court will aid a defective appointment where the person in favour of whom the appointment is made is (a) a purchaser for value from the appointor; (b) a creditor of the appointor; (c) the wife or child of the appointor; or (d) where the appointment is in favour of a charity.

It may be added, that the common law rule, now repealed, that a person cannot convey to himself or to his wife, never applied to powers. Thus the donee of a general power of appointment could always execute the power in his own favour, while of special powers one of the most common is a power to jointure the donee's wife.

And where the donee of a general power appoints in favour of certain objects, but in such a way as to show an intention to take the property out of the power (Re De Lusi's Trusts, 3 L. R. Ir. 232), but such appointment fails—as, for example, if the appointment is made by will, and the appointee predeceases the appointor—the fund so appointed becomes part of the appointor's estate. (Coxen v. Rowland, (1894) 1 Ch. 406.)

Extinction of Powers.—Powers may be extinguished or determined in various ways—by the complete execution of them, by the death of the donee of them, by the failure of their objects, by the acquisition by the donee of the full ownership of the land or goods over which they subsist, and by the alienation of the estate or interest over which they subsist, as, for example, by the sale of a settled estate. Whether a power could be extinguished by release formerly depended upon whether it was a power simply collateral, or a power relating to the land. By a power simply collateral was meant a power vested in a donee who had no interest whatever in the land over which the power subsisted, and who could not exercise the power in his own favour. Such a person was formerly incapable of extinguishing, or even suspending, the power by any act on his part. Now, however, by sect. 52 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), a person to whom any power, whether coupled with an interest or not, is given may by deed release, or contract not to exercise, the power. This enactment, however, does not enable a person to release a limited power where there is a duty on him not to release it, that is, where he is a trustee of it. (Re Eyre, 49 L. T. N. S. 259.) But where there is no duty not to release it, the mere fact that the donee of the power obtains a benefit personally by releasing the power will not make such a release fraudulent. (In re Somes, Smith v. Somes, (1896) 1 Ch. 250.) By sect. 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), the donee of a power is enabled to disclaim it by deed, and thereupon he ceases to be capable of exercising it, while it may be exercised by the other or others, or survivor or survivors of the other or others of the persons to whom the power is given, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument creating the power.

Powers of Revocation.—A power of revocation is, in a sense, the antithesis of a power of appointment. A power of appointment is an authority to create interests; a power of revocation is an authority to determine interests.

Powers of revocation arise in the same way as powers of appointment. They subsist over the use of the thing, and they operate either under the Statute of Uses or in equity, according as their subject-matter is freehold land or not. A power of revocation is usually inserted in voluntary settlements, and often in marriage settlements. Thus, if a husband makes a post-nuptial settlement on his wife and children, a power is usually reserved to revoke the uses—under certain circumstances—declared in the settlement. If this be all the power reserved, the exercise of it has the effect of rendering the settlement void. Usually, however, a power of revocation is accompanied by a power of new appointment, and unless there is something to the contrary in the settlement, from the existence there of a power of revocation, a power of new appointment will be implied. (1 Sugd. Pow. 461.) In this case the settlor can revoke the old uses and declare new ones: in other words, he can vary the settlement without nullifying it. But where the revocation and new appointment may be made by will, a mere general devise or bequest will not, by virtue of sect. 27 of the Wills Act, be taken to be an exercise of the power reserved. (In re Brace, Welch v. Colt, (1891) 2 Ch. 671.)

It is to be noted that once a power of revocation and new appointment has been executed, the new uses appointed cannot be again revoked, unless a new power of revocation is expressly reserved in the instrument appointing the new uses. (1 Sugd. Pow. 449.)

SUB-SECTION 5.

PERPETUITIES AND ACCUMULATIONS.

	PAGE	PAGE
Rule against Perpetuities	154	Accumulations..... 157
Application to Powers	156

Rule against Perpetuities.—We have already seen how the ancient common law originally insisted that all interests in lands should be vested, that is, should definitely belong to a definite owner, and how that rule was relaxed in the case of contingent remainders. With regard to contingent remainders, however, a restriction was put upon their creation by the doctrine that a limitation of a remainder to the child or other issue, or to the heir of a person unborn at the date of the settlement, is invalid. (See supra, p. 121.) But this was a common law doctrine, and as such applicable only to legal estates in land. Future interests in goods, and executory interests in lands, unknown to the common law, were not affected by it.

The evil, however, which the common law rule was designed to prevent, was just as likely to arise in connection with the new interests as in connection with common-law estates; and so, as was to be expected, it soon was found necessary to devise a rule of restriction applicable to them. This was accomplished by an adaptation of the common law rule. The longest period during which, by the most fortunate concurrence of circumstances, a remainder in land could at common law be rendered inalienable was during any number of specific lives in being at the date of the settlement, and twenty-one years after the dropping of the last one, with an extra period for gestation, if gestation actually existed. Thus, in a limitation to A. for life, then to B. for life, then to C. for life, and on the death of the last surviving to his eldest son and his heirs, the remainder would at the utmost—that is, if the last survivor died leaving an only son en ventre sa mère—be rendered inalienable during the lives of A., B., and C., and inalienable a further period of twenty-one years, with some months for gestation—that is, until the last survivor's son came of age. (See supra, p. 56.) Now, this longest possible period was what the Courts adopted as the utmost period during which an executory interest, or a future equitable interest, in lands or goods could remain unvested. Any such interest failed if, by the limitation under which it arose, it would not or might not vest during a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years after, a further period for gestation being allowed if gestation actually existed. This is what is called the rule against perpetuities.

With regard to this rule, these points should be noted : In the first place, possible, not actual, events are to be considered in determining whether or not any given limitation offends against the rule. Thus, in a limitation to the use of A.—a bachelor—in fee simple until any son of his attains the age of twenty-one, and then to the use of such son, the executory interest is good, because the event which is to vest it must, if it takes place at all, take place not later than twenty-one years after A.'s death, a period, if necessary, being allowed for gestation. But, in a similar limitation to A.—a bachelor—in fee simple until a son of his attains the age of twenty-five, the executory interest is bad, because, though one of A.'s sons may attain that age even during A.'s life, yet it is possible at the time the limitation is made that no one may attain it until more than twenty-one years after A.'s death. (Dungannon v. Smith, 12 Cl. & F. 546.) And the same rule applies when the executory interest is given to a class, the members of which may not be ascertainable till more than twenty-one years after a life or lives in being. (In re Mervin, (1891) 3 Ch. 197.) On the other hand, the twenty-one years after the dropping of a life or lives in being may be taken in gross—that is, it may be fixed independently of any person's minority. Thus, a limitation to the use of A. for life, and afterwards to the use of such person as shall, twenty-one years after A.'s death, be the eldest male descendant of A., is good. (Cadell v. Palmer, 7 Bligh, N. S. 202.) Moreover, if any executory interest be void as violating the rule against perpetuities, all subsequent limitations, though themselves not violating the rule, fail too. (Hale v. Hale, 3 Ch. D. 643.) This, however, is not the case as to limitations following a power to appoint to objects which are too remote. Limitations, in default of such a void power, are not themselves void, as such limitations are not really subsequent to the interests to arise under the power, but limitations in lieu of such interests. (In re Abbott, Peacock v. Frigout, (1893) 1 Ch. 54.)

The rule against perpetuities does not apply to limitations following estates in tail, nor does it apply to limitations over from one charity to another. (Christ's Hospital v. Grainger, 1 Mac. & G. 460; In re Tyler, Tyler v. Tyler, (1891) 3 Ch. 252.) It does, however, apply to limitations in favour of an individual in succession to a charity, and in favour of a charity in succession to an individual. (In re Bowen, Lloyd Phillips v. Davis, (1893) 2 Ch. 491.)

By sect. 10 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), where, under any instrument coming into effect after 31st December, 1882, "a person is entitled to land in fee, or for a term of years absolute or determinable on life, or for a term of life, with an executory limitation over on default or failure of all or any of his issue, whether within or at any specified period of time or not, that executory limitation shall become void if and as soon as there is living any issue who has obtained the age of twenty-one of the class on default or failure whereof the limitation over was to take effect."

Application of Rule to Powers.—The rule against perpetuities applies to powers of appointment, but its application varies according as the power is special or general. When the power is special, the instrument creating the power is regarded as the settlement, or limitation of the future interests, and, accordingly, the period is calculated from the execution of that instrument. Thus, if the special power is to appoint among the children of a marriage about to be concluded, such a power would be good; but if the power was to appoint life interests merely to such children, with remainders over to their children, this power would be bad, since it might tie up the funds for a longer period than a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years; the children's children might not be born until more than twenty-one years after the death of the donee of the power.

On the other hand, in the case of a general power of appointment, the instrument creating it is not regarded as a settlement, since the property subject to the power is in no way tied up, the donee of a general power being able to dispose of it in what manner he likes. The settlement here arises—if it arises at all—on the execution of the power itself. When the appointor appoints the property subject to the power, he is precisely in the position of any other grantor. If he appoints to objects too remote, his appointment will fail precisely as if he had been owner and limited the property to the same objects by an ordinary conveyance.

Accumulations.—An interest in land or goods, then, may be limited so that it shall not vest in anyone during a life or lives in being and twenty-one years after. The rule which permitted this permitted the income of the land or goods during this period to remain unvested too. Thus the settlor might direct that the income of the land or goods might be received by trustees and held by them in trust for the benefit of that person in whom the corpus of the property should ultimately vest. Where, however, the corpus is vested from the first solely in the grantee, and it and the accumulated income are both to be paid over to him at the end of the period for which the income is to be accumulated, the Court will not enforce the direction to accumulate. The accumulation directed is for his benefit exclusively, and he is entitled to put an end to it when he likes. (Wharton v. Masterman, (1895) A. C. 186.)

Owing to an abuse of this right to accumulate the income of settled property by a Mr. Thellusson, who endeavoured to tie up all his property and the income of it for the benefit of his remote descendants, an act to limit the power was passed, commonly called the Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98).

This act limited the period during which the income of settled property—whether real or personal—could be accumulated to the following: (a) the life or lives of the settlor or settlors; (b) twenty-one years from the death of the settlor; (c) the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who shall be living or en ventre sa mère at the death of settlor; (d) the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who under the settlement would for the time being be, if of full age, entitled to the income directed to be accumulated. These are alternative periods—that is, an accumulation cannot be directed during a combination of two or more of them (Jagger v. Jagger, 25 Ch. D. 729)—but the act does not apply to accumulations directed for the purpose of (a) paying the debts of the settlor or of any other person; (b) raising portions for any child or children of the settlor or of any person taking any interest under the settlement; nor does it extend to any direction as to timber or woods upon any land or tenements. (Sect. 2.)

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 36, s. 41, the Thellusson Act is extended to heritable property in Scotland, but it does not apply at all to Ireland. The fact, however, that the owner of land in England has an Irish domicile will not prevent the application of the act to a settlement by him of such land. (Freke v. Lord Carbery, L. R. 16 Eq. 461.)

A further restriction has been put upon accumulations

by the Accumulations Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 58.) By that act, where the funds resulting from accumulating the income of settled property are to be invested in the purchase of land only, no accumulation is to be for a longer period than the minority or respective minorities of the person or persons who would, if of full age, be entitled to receive the income directed to be accumulated. (In re Danson, Bell v. Danson, (1895) W. N. 102.) This act is not expressly limited to Great Britain, nor is it to be read with Thellusson's Act. It applies, therefore, to Ireland, where heretofore the only limit on accumulations was that imposed by the rule against perpetuities. (Cochrane v. Cochrane, 11 L. R. Ir. 361.)

It has been held that any limitation in a settlement which directs accumulation during a period exceeding that allowed by the Thellusson Act, and yet not exceeding the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities, is not, like a limitation violating the latter rule, void ab initio, but is merely void in so far as it exceeds the period allowed. (Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 54.)

SECTION IV.

IN CONDITIONAL OWNERSHIP.

	PAGE		PAGE
Conditional Ownership	159	Mortgages generally	165
Kinds of Conditions	160	Kinds of Mortgages	167
Void Conditions	161	Sub-sect. 1. Mortgages of Land	169
Conditions in Restraint of		Part A. Mortgages by Deed	170
Marriage	163	Part B. Mortgages by De-
Conditional Limitations.....	163	posit	184
Conditional Interests	164	Sub-sect. 2. Mortgages of Goods	187

Conditional Ownership.—When a person owns an interest in land or goods, subject to a condition which, under certain circumstances, will transfer it to another or others, his ownership is conditional, or, as it is sometimes called, defeasible. This means, that by the instrument creating his interest its existence or its quantum is made to depend on the happening or non-happening of a future and uncertain event. That event may be one which the grantee may or may not be able to bring about ; in either case, so long as it is uncertain whether it will happen or not, his interest is conditional.

Kinds of Conditions.—Conditions generally arise by express limitation, but sometimes they are implied by law. Formerly, for example, it was an implied condition of a life estate that the tenant for life should not alienate, or attempt to alienate, the fee simple. Such an act on his part caused a forfeiture of the life estate to the reversioner or remainderman. Now, however, implied conditions usually arise in connection with the tenure of offices, it being always an implied condition of an office that the holder of it shall discharge the duties of it.

Conditions arising by express limitations, or express conditions, as they are commonly called, are of two kinds, precedent and subsequent. Conditions which are precedent as to one interest and subsequent as to another are sometimes called mixed conditions, or conditions of cesser and acceleration.

A condition precedent is a condition which must be fulfilled before any interest can arise ; a condition subsequent, a condition which is annexed to the interest after it has come into existence. Take, for example, a limitation to the use of A.'s second son and his heirs, but should such second son succeed to A.'s settled estates, then to the use of A.'s third son and his heirs. Now here the condition affecting the interests of both sons is the same—the second son's succeeding to his father's settled estates. But as to the interest of the second son, it is a condition subsequent, while as to the interest of the third son, it is a condition precedent. Immediately on the instrument coming into operation the gift to the second son is complete; his interest is vested subject to the condition which may divest it and transfer it to his younger brother. The latter, however, has no actual interest in the land until the condition is fulfilled, and if it never be fulfilled, he never shall have any interest under the grant. As the condition is thus a condition precedent as to the third son's interest, and a condition subsequent as to the second son's interest, it belongs to that class of conditions which, as they have the characteristics of both conditions precedent and conditions subsequent, are called mixed conditions.

The distinction between conditions precedent and conditions subsequent is important in many respects, but in none more so than as regards void conditions.

Void Conditions.—Conditions of all kinds are void when they are contrary to the law, or contrary to the policy of the law, or when they are impossible, uncertain, contrariant, or repugnant to the nature of the estate.

A condition is contrary to the law, or illegal, when the law of England prohibits the performance of it. Thus a condition that the grantee of an interest shall, within a given time, murder a certain person, would be illegal, and, therefore void. (Co. Litt. 206b.) And a condition which, at the time the instrument creating it was executed, was quite legal and capable of performance, may by a subsequent change in the law become illegal and accordingly void. Thus if a lease of land were granted, subject to a condition to maintain and repair certain houses thereon, and afterwards, in furtherance of some scheme of public improvement, the said houses were ordered to be demolished, the condition requiring their maintenance would become void.

A condition, on the other hand, is contrary to the policy of the law, when its object, though not contrary to any positive rule of law, yet is to restrain something which the law regards with favour, or to promote something which the law regards with disfavour. Thus, a condition tending to promote immorality, a condition in general restraint of marriage, a condition in general restraint of trade, a condition in general restraint of alienation, are all void as being contrary to the policy of the law.

Again, a condition is impossible when, at the time the instrument creating it was executed, it was plainly physically impossible to perform it, as, for example, a condition that the grantee shall visit the moon. And a condition is uncertain when it is so vague in its terms that no one can say what it requires. And a condition is contrariant when it is irreconcilable with the gift or grant to which it is attached; as, for example, if the grant be of an estate tail, and the condition be that the estate is to go over to another not on failure of the heirs of the grantee's body, but on his death. And a condition is repugnant to the nature of the estate, when it endeavours to attach to the estate granted an incident which the law does not permit to be attached to the kind of estate granted; as if, for example, the grant be of an estate in fee, subject to the condition that the grantee shall be impeachable for waste. (See In re Elliot, Kelly v. Elliot, (1896) 2 Ch. 353.)

Now with regard to void conditions, the general rule is this: that where they are conditions precedent they prevent any estate ever arising, while where they are conditions subsequent they have no effect in determining or altering the estate to which they are attached. The reasoning on which this rule is based seems to be this: void conditions are incapable of legal performance; therefore, where their performance must by the terms of the grant precede the arising of the interest, the interest cannot arise; while where it must precede the determination of the interest, the interest cannot be so determined. A partial exception to this rule occurs in the case of conditions in restraint of marriage.

Conditions in Restraint of Marriage.—It is only conditions in general restraint of marriage that are void. A limitation merely on the right to marry, like a limitation on the right to trade, is good provided it is reasonable. (Jenner v. Turner, 16 Ch. D. 188.) Thus a condition in restraint of a second marriage, or in restraint of marriage to a particular person, or in restraint of marriage to any member of a class socially inferior to the person restrained (Greene v. Kirkwood, (1895) 1 Ir. R. 130), or without the consent of such person's parents or guardians, is reasonable, and therefore good.

Where, however, the interest to which a condition in general or partial restraint of marriage is annexed, is an interest in personalty, two exceptions to the general rules as to conditions are made. In the case of a condition subsequent in partial restraint of marriage, unless there is a gift over of the interest on the breach of the condition, the condition is considered in terrorem, and therefore void. In the case of a condition precedent in general restraint of marriage, the interest will arise in spite of the fact that the condition is void.

When there is a condition in restraint of marriage, save with consent of parents or other persons, the consent in question must be given before the marriage, and the consent of the survivor, where one of those whose consent is required is dead, will suffice. But if by the act of God the sole person to consent becomes unable to do so—as by his dying or becoming lunatic (In re Harris, Fitzroy v. Harris, (1891) W. N. 76)—the condition is discharged.

Conditional Limitations.—A conditional limitation differs from a grant subject to a condition subsequent in this respect: in the latter, the condition is something super-added to the limitation; in the former, the condition is itself part of the limitation. Thus, a grant to A. for life, but if B. should return from Rome then the grantor to re-enter and determine the grant, would be a grant subject to a condition subsequent ; but a grant to the use of A. until B. returns from Rome, though it would convey practically the same interest, would nevertheless be not a grant subject to a condition subsequent, but a conditional limitation.

The distinction is important for two reasons. In the first place, an event which would be bad as a condition subsequent, may be good as the determining event in a conditional limitation. Thus, a grant of land by way of use, or a gift of personalty by way of trust, or a gift of either land or goods by will to a person until he marries, or until he attempts to alienate, and then to another, will determine on the marriage of the grantee, or on the first attempt on his part to alienate. (Dugdale v. Dugdale, 38 Ch. D. 176 ; and see In re Sheward, Sheward v. Brown, (1893) 3 Ch. 502.) In the second place, while the breach of a condition subsequent does not determine the interest unless the person entitled to take advantage of it re-enters, the happening of the determining event in the case of a conditional limitation puts an end ipso facto to the interest.

It follows from this latter circumstance, that in case the grantee under a conditional limitation not subject to a rent were permitted to hold on for twelve years after the happening of the determining event without acknowledging in writing the reversioner's title, the latter would be barred under the Statute of Limitations. (See infra, p. 257.) No such result would follow in the case of a grant subject to a condition subsequent.

Conditional Interests.—In the preceding parts of this work, we have had to consider most kinds of estates and interests in personalty subject to conditions. It is unnecessary to repeat what has already been said of them. But there is one class of conditional estates which we have so far only referred to incidentally, and that is mortgage estates.

Mortgage estates differ from other conditional estates in this respect: other conditional estates are conditional only to this extent—that their existence depends on the conditions; while they exist, their incidents are practically the same as the incidents of estates of the same kind not subject to a condition. Mortgage estates, on the other hand, are to a great extent the creatures of the condition annexed to them; most of their incidents result from the condition, and these incidents are very different from the incidents of estates of the same kind which are not subject to the mortgage condition. For this reason, mortgage estates, unlike other conditional estates, need separate and individual treatment.

Mortgages generally.—A mortgage is a transaction in which a borrower transfers to the lender the ownership of, or an interest in, land or goods, the condition of the transfer being that the ownership or interest is vested in the lender as security for the loan. The borrower is called the mortgagor, the lender the mortgagee, the loan the mortgage debt, and the land or goods transferred the mortgage estate or property.¹

The common law regarded a mortgage, of land at any rate, as simply a conveyance for value, subject to a condition that if the purchase money were repaid on a certain day, with interest in the meantime, the vendee should reconvey to the vendor; and on the principle of construing grants strictly as against the grantor, it held that any failure to fulfil the condition on the part of the vendor was a breach of the condition, and, as such, rendered the land or goods conveyed the absolute property of the vendee.

¹ Two other transactions in the nature of mortgages of land were formerly in use: Vivum vadium, or living pledge, where the borrower entered upon the land and received the rents and profits until these had paid off his loan; and the Welsh mortgage, where the borrower received the profits in lieu of interest on the loan. Both these are now obsolete in England, but are still in occasional use in Ireland.

Equity, however, looked at the essence and not the form of the transaction. The essence of the transaction was the loan made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, and the land was transferred simply to secure the repayment of that loan. Equity insisted that the land should be held merely as a security, and that, provided the creditor suffered no substantial damage, it did not matter whether the condition to repay on a given day was strictly fulfilled or not; even after failure to pay on that day, the mortgagor was entitled, subject to reasonable conditions for the protection of the mortgagee, to repay the loan and to demand a re-transfer of the thing mortgaged. Meanwhile, equity regarded the mortgagor as the real owner of the mortgage estate, and the mortgagee as a mere creditor with a claim to payment out of it.

So anxious was equity to preserve to the mortgagor the right to redeem, that it would not permit it to be taken from him, or to be in any way clogged or fettered by any agreement entered into between the mortgagee and him at the time the mortgage was effected. For example, if it was then expressly agreed that on failure to pay the debt the mortgagee should be entitled to the property absolutely or conditionally on giving the mortgagor a certain further amount, the Court would hold this agreement invalid. Once it was proved that the transaction was one by way of security for a loan, the usual incidents of a mortgage attached themselves to it, among which was the right to redeem after failure to pay the debt. This is what is meant by the maxim, once a mortgage, always a mortgage. (See Lord Bramwell's judgment, Salt v. Marquess of Northampton, (1892) A. C. 1 at p. 18.)

In holding a mortgage to be merely a transaction for securing the repayment of a loan, equity, as has been said, was guided by the real nature of the transaction—i.e., the intention of the parties. If what the parties intended was not a mortgage but a conditional sale, then equity regarded the transaction as what it was—an out-and-out conveyance, subject to a condition to re-convey at a certain time and on certain terms—and insisted as strongly as the common law on the condition being observed. As a mortgage and a conditional sale were often the same in form, sometimes it was difficult to decide which of them was intended in a given case. The test was whether a debt for which the grantor could be sued resulted from the transaction? If it did, the case was one of mortgage; if it did not, the case was one of conditional sale. (Williams v. Owen, 5 M. & C. 308.) Where there was no evidence as to this, equity would look to the circumstances surrounding the transaction, such as the amount of money given in comparison with the value of the thing transferred, the party who paid the costs of the transaction—the practice being for a mortgagor to pay for a mortgage, while a vendee pays for his conveyance—whether the grantee entered immediately into possession of the thing transferred, and such like. (Ex parte Odell, 10 Ch. D. 76.)

Kinds of Mortgages.—Mortgages are divisible into three classes,—legal, equitable, and statutory.

A legal mortgage is a mortgage by which the legal title to an interest of the mortgagor's¹ in the thing mortgaged is transferred to the mortgagee. An equitable mortgage is a mortgage by which an equitable title to an interest of the mortgagor's in the thing mortgaged is transferred to the mortgagee. A statutory mortgage is a mortgage which derives its legal effect from a statute. Often it transfers to the mortgagee neither a legal nor an equitable title, but merely a right to realise his debt by the sale of the thing mortgaged, as in the case of a mortgage of a ship under the

¹ In mortgages of leaseholds it is usual not to convey the mortgagee's whole interest to the mortgagor, but merely to grant him a sub-lease; the object being to relieve the mortgagee from liability for breaches of covenant and failure to pay rent on the mortgagor's part while the mortgagor remains in possession. If the leasehold were assigned, the mortgagee would be liable for these, even though he never took possession of the land. (See infra, p. 211.)

Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, ss. 34 and 35; see Appendix D.), or a right, on failure of the mortgagee to pay the interest or debt, to enter upon the thing mortgaged and receive the rents and profits, or have the legal title to it transferred to him or the land sold, as in the case of a registered charge on land, under the Land Titles and Transfer Acts, 1875 and 1897 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87, and 60 & 61 Vict. c. 65). Statutory mortgages properly so called are to be distinguished from statutory mortgages under the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), ss. 26 and 28, which are practically ordinary legal or equitable mortgages in the form given in the statute, which implies certain covenants.

In Ireland there is a peculiar kind of statutory mortgage, called a judgment mortgage, which arises under the provisions of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 29. Sections 6 and 7 of that act provide that any judgment creditor may make an affidavit specifying any lands of which his judgment debtor is seised or possessed, or over which he has a general power of appointment, to be exercised without the assent of another person. On this affidavit being registered, all the estate of the judgment debtor in the lands specified is vested in the judgment creditor, subject to a right of redemption reserved to the debtor on payment of the money mentioned in the judgment. The judgment debt thus becomes a judgment mortgage on the land in question, and the rights and remedies of the judgment mortgagee are the same as those enjoyed by a mortgagee by deed. (Eyre v. McDowell, 9 H. L. C. 647.)

It will not be necessary to say more here of statutory mortgages. As to legal and equitable mortgages, these subsist equally over land and goods. Mortgages of goods, however, differ considerably from mortgages of land, and, therefore, it will be expedient to treat of the two kinds separately.

SUB-SECTION 1.

MORTGAGES OF LAND.

	PAGE		PAGE
Legal and Equitable Mort-		Part A. Mortgages by Deed..	170
gagee.....	169	Part B. Mortgages by Deposit	184

Legal and Equitable Mortgages.—As has already been said, a legal mortgage is one which transfers to the mortgagee a legal title to an interest of the mortgagor's in the thing mortgaged. Now, in order that a legal title may be transferred, two conditions must be fulfilled: firstly, the mortgagor must have a legal title; and, secondly, he must execute a legal transfer of it. If he has only an equitable title he can only make an equitable mortgage, whatever sort of conveyance he uses. Thus, a cestui que trust who mortgages his interest in the trust estate, or a legal mortgagor who executes a second mortgage on the mortgage estate, can only create an equitable mortgage, since neither of them has a legal title to transfer. Again, if a mortgagor uses, in making a mortgage, a conveyance not recognized by the common law or by statute, whether he has a legal title or not, the mortgage is only equitable. Thus, the legal owner of a fee simple estate, who obtains an advance from his banker by depositing as security the title deeds to his fee simple estate, does not create a legal mortgage of that estate. The mere deposit of title deeds is not sufficient at law to transfer title to any interest in land, though it is sufficient in equity. (See infra, p. 184.)

Equitable mortgages, then, arise either through the mortgagor having only an equitable title to the thing mortgaged, or through his employing a mode of conveyance which, being recognized only in equity, can transfer only an equitable title. Equitable mortgages of the former kind, however, approach much nearer legal mortgages than equitable mortgages of the second kind, and it is impossible to discuss legal mortgages without.

considering them. Accordingly, we will divide the subject of mortgages of land, not into legal and equitable mortgages, but into mortgages by deed and mortgages by deposit of title deeds, or by memorandum of deposit; or, to put it in other words, mortgages by legal conveyance and mortgages by equitable conveyance.

A. Mortgages by Deed.

	PAGE		PAGE
Position of Parties to Mortgage	170	(b.) Sale	177
Remedies for Interest on Mortgage	174	(c.) Action on the Covenant	179
(a.) Taking Possession ..	174	Redemption of Mortgage Estate	179
(b.) Appointing Receiver.	175	Restriction on Right to Redeem	180
(c.) Action on Covenant .	176	(a.) Tacking	180
Remedies for Mortgage Debt.	176	(b.) Consolidation	183
(a.) Foreclosure	177

Position of Parties to Mortgage.—As has been pointed out, the effect of a mortgage by deed is to convey whatever interest is included in the mortgage, whether that is legal or equitable, to the mortgagee. If he be first mortgagee, he becomes entitled to and should—for his protection—obtain possession of the mortgagor's title deeds. He is entitled, moreover, to immediate possession of the land mortgaged, even though there be a covenant in the mortgage deed that the mortgagee shall not claim possession until default is made in paying the interest or principal of the debt, such a covenant merely giving the mortgagor a right of action for damages if the mortgagee takes possession in defiance of it. (Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Meriv. 359; Doe v. Davies, 16 Jur. 44.) This right to take immediate possession is now, to a certain degree, limited by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, which enacts that, in an action of ejectment brought by a mortgagee against a mortgagor, the Court will stay proceedings on payment by the mortgagor of debt, interest, and costs (ss. 219, 220).

As is intended, however, this right to take possession is seldom exercised by the mortgagee until the mortgagor make default in payment of interest or debt. Meanwhile, the mortgagor remains in possession, as tenant by sufferance if he has not attorned tenant, or if he has done so, as the tenant at will of the mortgagee (Scobie v. Collins, (1895) 1 Q. B. 375), but really with nearly all the ordinary powers of a legal owner. Thus, he is entitled to receive all the rents and profits of the land without rendering any account of them to the mortgagee. Formerly, however, he could not sue for these without joining the mortgagee, who was the legal owner. However, now by sect. 25, sub-sect. 5, of the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), and in Ireland by sect. 28, sub-sect. 5, of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland) Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 57), he is enabled to sue for them in his own name. He can, moreover, commit the same waste after the mortgage as he could before it, provided he does not thereby injure the mortgagee by rendering the land a scanty security for the debt. And if a business be carried on upon the mortgaged land, he can make subject to the same proviso any contracts affecting the land which may be necessary for carrying on the business. (Gough v. Wood, (1894) 1 Q. B. 713.) Besides these rights, considerable powers of leasing are usually conferred on him by the mortgage deed, and in mortgages executed since the commencement (31st December, 1881) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), certain such powers are implied, unless the deed expressly excludes them. These implied powers permit him to grant, without the concurrence of the mortgagee, agricultural or occupation leases for terms not exceeding twenty-one years, and building leases for terms not exceeding ninety-nine years, such leases to take effect in possession within twelve months of grant, to have the best rent reasonably obtainable reserved on them, and to contain covenants for the payment of rent. (Sect. 18.) Where the mortgage, having been executed before the commencement of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, contains no powers of leasing, or, having been executed after the commencement of that Act, expressly denies such powers to the mortgagor, the mortgagor can still grant leases binding against himself, but liable to be set aside by the mortgagee on taking possession of the land. To bind the mortgagee in these cases, he must join in the lease.

It is to be noted that the provisions of sect. 18 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, apply to mortgages, whether by deed or not. Where the mortgage is not by deed, the powers given by the section can only be excluded by a written agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee. Such an agreement will exclude them in any case. (Subsect. 13 of sect. 18.)

Besides these rights, which belong to a mortgagor only so long as he is in possession of the land, there are others which belong to him whether he is in possession or not. His right to redeem the land from the mortgagee, which is commonly called his equity of redemption, is regarded, as has already been said, as an equitable estate in the land (Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 603; 2 W. & T.), and he may deal with it as an estate. He may sell it, settle it, or mortgage it, though, if he mortgage it without informing the second mortgagee of the prior mortgage, his right to redeem will, as a penalty, become forfeited. (4 & 5 Will. & Mary, c. 16. See infra, p. 186.) On his death it will devolve precisely as the legal interest would have done, that is, if it is a fee simple, an estate pur autre vie, or a leasehold, it will go under his will, if he has made one; if he has not made one, it will devolve according to its nature and its tenure, that is, it will go to his administrators for his next of kin if leasehold or an estate pur autre vie, and for his common law or customary heir, according as the tenure is common socage or gavelkind socage if it be fee simple.

The mortgagee, on the other hand, though, on execution of the mortgage deed, he becomes legal owner of the interest mortgaged, yet is regarded in equity as merely a creditor having a charge on the land as a security for his debt. As long as he permits the mortgagor to remain in possession he has practically little power over the land. Perhaps his most important relation to it is, that he cannot take a lease of it from the mortgagor. Even his taking possession does not put him in as good a position as that enjoyed by the mortgagor in possession. He is, like him, entitled to the rents and profits of the land, but, unlike him, he is bound to render, on demand, a strict account of all he has received, and of all that, but for his wilful default or negligence, he might have received. (Noyes v. Pollock, 32 Ch. D. 53.) In such account he must also make due allowance for any part of the land he may have himself occupied by charging against himself an occupation rent. He is bound, moreover, to keep the mortgaged premises in repair as far as the surplus rents and profits will enable him to do so; and he can, in rendering accounts, take credit for what he has spent in repairs or in making improvements, as far as these have enhanced the value of the land. (Henderson v. Astwood, (1894) A. C. 150.) And he is not entitled to commit waste, unless the land forms a scanty security for his debt, when he can commit such waste as may be necessary to raise sufficient money to pay the interest. And in case of mortgages by deed, executed after the Conveyancing Act, unless he is expressly prohibited by the deed from so doing, a mortgagee in possession may cut timber ripe for cutting and not planted for ornament or shelter, whether his security be scanty or not. (Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 19, sub-s. 1, (iv).)

The mortgagee in possession has besides considerable powers as to leases. He is bound by leases made before the mortgage, but the lessees under such leases need not pay him their rents until notice to do so has been given them. As to leases made by the mortgagor after the mortgage, if the mortgagee was a party to them he is, of course, bound by them; but if he was not a party to them, unless they were made under an express power, or a power implied by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, he can, on taking possession, repudiate them. If, however, by repudiating an advantageous lease, he brings loss upon the estate, he will be liable for that loss as profit which he might, but for his wilful default, have received. (2 Spence's Eq. Juris. 806.) In possession he has, under sect. 18 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the same powers to grant leases as those enjoyed by a mortgagor in possession. (See supra, p. 171.)

Whether in possession or out of possession, equity always regarded the mortgagee as being a mere creditor, and, therefore, it regarded his interest in the land as pure personalty. Accordingly, on his death, it devolved like pure personalty—that is, it went to his executors, if he left a will; to his administrators if he did not. But at law he owned the land, and so, when he died, leaving a will, the mortgaged estate, if freehold, went under the residuary clause or otherwise to the residuary or special devisee, and if he left no will, it descended to his heir. This led to various difficulties, which several statutes were passed to remove. (See 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, ss. 19, 20.) Now, by sect. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the legal rule is made to conform to the equitable rule, and henceforth, whether a mortgagor dies leaving a will, or whether he dies intestate, the legal estate in the mortgage land is to vest, like personalty, in his personal representatives.

Remedies for Interest on Mortgage.—(a) Taking possession.—If the mortgagor fails to pay the interest due on the mortgage debt, the mortgagee may, if he likes, secure its payment by taking possession of the mortgaged land, as we have seen. He can then deduct out of the rents and profits received by him the interest due to him, and either hand the balance over to the mortgagor, or devote it to the reduction of the mortgage debt. Owing, however, to the fact that the mortgagor, as has been pointed out, is liable to account, not merely for what he receives, but for what he might, but for his own default or negligence, have received, and to the further fact that he is not entitled to any remuneration for the trouble of managing the estate save he is a solicitor, when he can charge for any legal work done by him, which, if he were not a solicitor, he might retain a solicitor to do (Mortgagees' Legal Costs Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 25)), resort to this means of obtaining payment of interest is not much practised.

(b) Appointing receiver.—A more common and convenient way of obtaining payment is that supplied by the power now usually given to the mortgagee to appoint a receiver on failure of the mortgagor to pay the interest or the mortgage debt. Such a power is now implied by sect. 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, in all mortgages by deed executed after the commencement of the Act not containing a provision excluding it. The implied power arises only when there has been a failure to pay the mortgage debt when such debt became payable, and the receiver must be appointed in writing under the hand of the mortgagee, who is entitled at any time to remove him. The great advantage, from the mortgagee's point of view, is that, though he appoints the receiver, yet the latter is regarded as the agent of the mortgagor, and so the mortgagee is not liable for his negligence or misconduct in his office. Moreover, the appointment of a receiver does not render the mortgagee liable under the covenants affecting the mortgaged land which taking possession would. The receiver is entitled to a commission of 5 per cent. on the profits collected by him for his labour. As to the profits collected by him, they are to be devoted to (1) the payment of rent, taxes, and outgoings; (2) keeping down annual payments and interest on preceding mortgages; (3) payment of receiver's commission and costs of insurance and repairs; (4) payment of interest on mortgage of appointor;

(5) residue to go to person entitled to the land subject to the mortgage. (Sect. 24, Conveyancing Act, 1881.)

(c) Action on covenant.—Where there is a separate covenant to pay the interest, as distinct from the corpus of the mortgage debt, as there is in well-drawn mortgages, an action can be brought on it to recover the interest without at the same time seeking repayment of the principal.

Remedies for Mortgage Debt.—Though equity held that a mortgagor's right to redeem the mortgaged land was not lost by his failure to pay the mortgage debt on the exact day fixed by the mortgage deed, yet it always would, on the application of the mortgagee, fix a time when the mortgagor would have to redeem or be deprived of his right to redeem altogether. This was, and still is, the primary remedy which a mortgagee possesses for the recovery of the mortgage debt. It is called action for foreclosure. Besides foreclosure, however, there are now commonly two other remedies which often prove more beneficial to the mortgagee. These are sale of the mortgaged land, and action on the covenant to repay the debt.

We will treat shortly of each of these seriatim; but, before doing so, it is well to point out that these remedies, when they all exist, are not alternative, but concurrent remedies. Thus, the mortgagee may sue on the personal covenant, and, if he obtains only partial repayment in this way, he may foreclose for the balance of his debt. (Rudge v. Richens, L. R. 8 C. P. 358.) He may even claim foreclosure and judgment on the covenant in the same writ (Dymond v. Croft, 3 Ch. D. 512); while, as we shall see, in any action for foreclosure, the Court, if it thinks proper to do so, may order a sale of the mortgaged estate instead. Where, however, a foreclosure has been obtained, if the mortgagee sues on the covenant, this will have the effect of re-opening the foreclosure and enabling the mortgagor to obtain a re-conveyance of the estate on repayment of the debt with interest and costs; and if the mortgagee has, after foreclosure, so dealt with the property as to make it impossible for him to re-convey it, he will not be permitted to sue on the covenant.

(a) Foreclosure.—In a foreclosure action, the plaintiff—who may be the first or any other mortgagee—claims that a time shall be fixed during which the mortgagor must redeem the mortgaged estate or be for ever foreclosed of his right to redeem. As has been said, the action may be brought by any mortgagee, but when it is brought by a second or third mortgagee, he must undertake to redeem the prior mortgage or mortgages. On the other hand, he asks the Court to discharge the estate of any mortgages or charges subsequent to his. This is what is meant by the maxim “redeem up, foreclose down.” It may be added that foreclosure is practically unknown in Ireland, the Court in every case ordering a sale. (Loughran v. Loughran, 15 L. R. Ir. 71.)

(b) Sale.—Sale of the mortgaged estate may take place under an order of the Court, or under an express power in the mortgage deed, or under a power implied by statute.

As to sale by order of the Court, by sect. 25 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, any person entitled to redeem may have, instead of an order for redemption, an order for the sale, or for sale or redemption in the alternative, of the mortgaged estate. (Sub-sect. 1.) And in any action for foreclosure, redemption, or sale, the Court may, on the request of any person interested in the mortgaged estate, whether as mortgagor or mortgagee, order, if it thinks fit, a sale of the mortgaged estate on such terms as it thinks just. (Sub-sect. 2.)

This section, however, does not extend to Ireland. In Ireland the Landed Estates Court is given power, by sect. 43 of the Sale and Transfer of Land (Ireland) Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 72), to order a sale of land which is subject to any incumbrance on the application of any incumbrancer or owner.

In the case of sale under an express power given to the mortgagee by the mortgage deed, the terms of the power must be strictly observed. Where, however, no express power is so given, then a statutory power to sell is implied by sect. 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. That implied power enables the mortgagee to sell or concur in selling the mortgaged estate either together or in lots, and either by public auction or by private contract, and subject to such conditions of sale as the mortgagee may think fit, with power to vary the contract of sale, or rescind it and resell, without being answerable for loss; provided only that he acts honestly in the matter. (Kennedy v. De Trafford, (1897) A. C. 427.)

This power is implied only, (a) in mortgages by deed; (b) made after the commencement of the act; (c) where there is nothing to the contrary in the mortgage deed. It arises only (a) after notice to pay mortgage debt and failure for three months to pay; or (b) interest has been in arrears for two months; or (c) there has been a breach of some condition in the mortgage other than the condition to pay the debt. (Sect. 20.) These provisions apply to Ireland.

When the mortgaged estate has been sold, the purchase-money must be devoted first to the payment of all incumbrances upon the land entitled to priority over that of the person exercising the power. That person is then entitled to discharge his own mortgage together with any arrears of interest due, even though more than six years' arrears be due (In re Marshfield, Marshfield v. Hutchins, 34 Ch. D. 721), and money spent by him in repairs and permanent improvements while in possession before sale (Henderson v. Astwood, (1894) A. C. 150). If there be any surplus the mortgagee who sold is a trustee, in the first place, for any puisne mortgagees of whose mortgages he has notice, and after or in default of these, for the mortgagor. (West London Commercial Bank v. Reliance Permanent Building Society, 29 Ch. D. 954.) As a trustee he is entitled, in case of a breach of trust, to the benefit of the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1888, and the Judicial Trustee Act, 1896, to the same extent as an express trustee. (See supra, p. 97; Thorne v. Heard and Marsh, (1895) A. C. 495.)

(c) Action on Covenant.—There is now usually a covenant in every mortgage deed in which the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage debt. Even, however, where there is no such covenant, the lending of the money implies a promise to repay it on which an action of debt would lie, unless there is something in the mortgage deed to show that the mortgagee was to look solely to the land for the satisfaction of the debt. (Yates v. Aston, 4 Q. B. 182.) Such an action would, however, be liable to be barred, like an action for any other simple contract debt, by the lapse of six years since interest or part of the debt was last paid, or since an acknowledgment in writing of the debt was last made by the mortgagor.

Where, however, there is a covenant to pay in the mortgage deed, an action lies upon it until twelve years have elapsed since the last payment on account of interest or debt, or the last written acknowledgment of the debt. And this will be the case when there is not merely a covenant in the mortgage deed, but a separate bond for the amount given by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. Generally speaking, the period of limitation for actions on bonds or covenants is not twelve but twenty years (see Appendix F.); but in the case of money charged on land by mortgage, judgment or lien, the period is reduced to twelve by sect. 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and this enactment extends to all remedies for such money. (Sutton v. Sutton, 22 Ch. D. 511.)

Redemption of Mortgage Estate.—The mortgagor or the assignee of or any one interested in the equity of redemption (Tarn v. Turner, 39 Ch. D. 456) is entitled to redeem the mortgage estate by repaying the loan with interest and costs on the day fixed by the mortgage deed for repayment. If he permits that day to go past, he must give the mortgagee six months' notice of his intention to repay, so as to give the mortgagee time to find another investment for the money, unless the mortgagee has demanded repayment or taken steps to enforce it, when immediate payment may be made. (Smith v. Smith, (1891) 3 Ch. 550.) The entering into possession of the mortgaged premises by the mortgagee is a demand for repayment within this rule. (Bovill v. Endle, (1896) 1 Ch. 648.)

On payment, the mortgagor is entitled to a reconveyance of the mortgaged estate. If the mortgagee refuses to accept payment, or refuses to reconvey the estate to the mortgagor, the latter has a remedy by an action of redemption. It is to be remembered (see supra, p. 180), that in such an action the Court can order a sale. (Sect. 25 Conveyancing Act, 1881.) By sect. 15 of the same Act, as amended by sect. 12 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, the mortgagor, save when the mortgagee is in possession, can claim, instead of a reconveyance to himself, a transfer of the mortgage to any person whom he shall nominate.

Restrictions on Right to Redeem.—The right of a mortgagor to redeem cannot be taken from him, but it may be restricted by the right to pay off one mortgage being made conditional on the paying off of another. This is the case where the same mortgagor has granted two mortgages, and these two mortgages have practically become one by the operation of the doctrine of tacking or the doctrine of consolidation.

(a) Tacking.—The process called tacking applies in the case of several mortgages upon the same interest or estate. To explain it, it is necessary to consider, first, the rules as to priority of mortgages.

The first point to be marked is that there can be only one legal mortgage of an interest in land, because a legal mortgage is a mortgage that transfers the legal title to the interest mortgaged, and there can be only one legal title. Accordingly, where there are several mortgages of the same interest, all of them, save one, must be equitable mortgages, and all of them without exception may be equitable mortgages. Whether there is or is not a legal mortgage among them does not matter if every subsequent mortgagee, when he advanced his money, was aware of the existence of the mortgage or mortgages already affecting the interest. In this case, the rule Qui prior est tempore potior est jure (who is prior in time is better in right) applies all round. The first mortgagee, whether legal or merely equitable, is entitled to be paid off first. The second second, and so on seriatim.

The case, however, is very different when the subsequent mortgagees were not aware, or had not notice as the phrase is, of the existence of the prior mortgages at the time they advanced their money. Then a different rule applies: where the equities are equal the law shall prevail. Accordingly, if one of the mortgagees has the legal title, that is, is a legal mortgagee, he will be entitled to priority over all the others, that is, to have his mortgage paid off in full before any of the others have any claim to payment out of the mortgage estate. This priority he may, through negligence or fraud on his part, be deprived of; but, assuming honesty and reasonable care, a legal mortgage takes precedence of all equitable mortgages executed before it, of the existence of which the legal mortgagee was unaware at the time he advanced his money.

Subject to the priority of the legal mortgage—if there be one—the equitable mortgagees, who have advanced their money without notice of other mortgages, will, as between themselves, be entitled to be paid off in order of time, just as if they had such notice. If one of them, however, buys in the legal mortgage, or sells his equitable mortgage to the legal mortgagee, then this equitable mortgage will be joined to the legal mortgage, and will be entitled to priority over all other equitable mortgages, whether executed before or after it. The equitable mortgage is then said to be tacked to the legal mortgage. Both are henceforth regarded as one mortgage, both for the purpose of priority over other mortgages, and for the purpose of redemption; neither the mortgagor nor any of the mortgagees can redeem the legal mortgage without redeeming also the equitable mortgage which has been tacked to it. (Marsh v. Lee, 2 Vent. 337; 1 W. & T.)

The same principle applies when the legal mortgagee, not being aware—or having notice, as the phrase is—of the existence of equitable mortgages, makes a further advance to the mortgagor on the security of the same estate. This second advance he is entitled to tack to his legal mortgage, and to claim that both shall be paid off before any of the equitable mortgages of which he had no notice. (Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. Wms. 491.)

In Ireland, the doctrine of tacking has been excluded by the operation of the Irish Registry Act. (6 Anne, c. 2 (Ir).) That Act renders the registration of all assurances affecting land in Ireland compulsory, save only leases for periods not exceeding twenty-one years, where possession of the land goes along with the lease, and, by sect. 4, the relative priority of registered instruments is made to depend on the time of their registration. The Courts have held, that the effect of this latter provision is to prevent not merely the tacking of one registered mortgage to a prior one (Latouche v. Dunsany, 1 Sch. & L. 137), but also the tacking of a further advance made by a registered mortgagee on the security of the same estate without notice of an intermediate incumbrance. (Tennison v. Sweeney, 7 Ir. Eq. 511.)

In Middlesex (7 Anne, c. 20), and in Yorkshire (47 & 48 Vict. c. 54), registration of assurances similar to that existing in Ireland, is also compulsory. It has been decided, however, that registration there has no effect in preventing tacking, nor does the registration of a prior charge on the land amount even to constructive notice to a subsequent mortgagee, who advances his money without actual notice of its existence. (Cator v. Cooley, 1 Cox, 182.)

It may be noted that, in the case of land registered under the Land Titles and Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), registered charges are to rank according to the order in which they are registered, not in which they are created, subject to an entry to the contrary being made in the register. (Sect. 28.)

(b) Consolidation.—The process called consolidation applies in the case of several mortgages given by the same person on different interests or estates. Owing to recent alterations in the law, it is not now so important as formerly.

When the owner of several interests or estates granted separate mortgages on each of them to secure separate debts, then, provided he redeemed them at the times fixed in the deed for the repayment of the debts, he was entitled to redeem each estate separately, although all the mortgages were vested in the same person. If, however, he allowed that time to go by without redeeming two or more of them, and these were held by the same person, that person was entitled to refuse to let him, or his assignee of the equity of redemption, redeem one of the mortgages without, at the same time, redeeming the other or others. (Pledge v. Carr, (1895) 1 Ch. 51.) The person holding the mortgages was then said to have consolidated the mortgages in question. If, however, before consolidation had actually taken place, the mortgagor had assigned his equity of redemption in one of the mortgaged estates to a third person, this would prevent any consolidation as against such third person. (Minter v. Carr, (1894) 3 Ch. 498.)

Where one interest was an ample, and another a scanty, security for the debt advanced on it, this right to consolidate was very valuable. It has, however, been very much limited in its application for the future by sect. 17 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which enacts, that, as to mortgages, one or all of which were made after the commencement of the Act, there shall be no consolidation unless a contrary intention is expressed in the mortgage deeds or one of them.

B. Mortgages by Deposit or Memorandum.

	PAGE		PAGE
Deposit or Memorandum	184	Forfeiture of Equity of Re-
Priority.....	185	demption	186

Deposit or Memorandum.—Equitable mortgages, as we have seen, arise in one of two ways. Firstly, through the mortgagor having nothing but an equitable interest to convey; or, secondly, through his having used a form of conveyance or transaction recognized only in equity. We have dealt with those arising in the first way as far almost as is necessary, and we have had to deal to a certain extent with the second kind also in the preceding part. There are, however, a few points still to be referred to as to both kinds, but more especially as to the latter, or, as they are commonly called, mortgages by deposit of title deeds or by memorandum of deposit.

To effect a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, all that is necessary is that the borrower should hand over to the lender the title deeds to the interest in question (or sufficient of them to show title), or in the case of land registered under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 and 1897, the land certificate issued under those Acts (sect. 8, Act of 1897), as security for the loan. (Russel v. Russel, 1 Bro. C. C. 269; 1 W. & T.) Usually a memorandum accompanies the deeds, setting out the object of the deposit, but this is not absolutely necessary. And a mortgage may even arise without an actual deposit if the mortgagor gives the lender a memorandum containing a promise to deposit the title deeds as security for the loan.

The only effect at common law of a deposit of title deeds as security for a loan is to make the Court refuse its aid to the depositor to recover the title deeds until he repays the loan. It transfers no interest in the land. Equity, however, treats a deposit of title deeds, or a memorandum promising to deposit them, as a valid mortgage of the land, and on failure of the depositor to pay the interest and loan, it will decree a foreclosure, and order the mortgagor to convey his interest in the mortgaged lands to the lender, six months being allowed for redemption. (Marshall v. Shrewsbury, L. R. 10 Ch. 254.) The powers of sale, appointment of receiver, &c., under sect. 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, are to be implied only when the mortgage is by deed. But the mortgagee by deposit may in England, under sect. 25 of the same act, and in Ireland under sect. 43, Sale and Transfer of Land Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 72), obtain an order for sale on application to the Court, if the Court see fit to grant it. And on his application the Court would always appoint a receiver. (Bodger v. Bodger, 11 W. R. 160.) On the other hand, the mortgagor by deposit has the same or rather a better right to redeem than the mortgagor by deed, since he is entitled to pay off the mortgage at any time without giving the mortgagee six months' notice (Fitzgerald's Trustee v. Mellersh, (1892) 1 Ch. 385), and the same right as the mortgagee by deed to an order for the sale of the mortgaged estate under sect. 25, sub-sect. 1, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. (See supra, p. 177.)

A mortgagee or mortgagor by deposit, while in possession of the land, has—unless they are excluded by written agreement—all the powers of leasing implied by sect. 18 of the Conveyancing Act. (See supra, p. 172.)

Priority of Equitable Mortgages.—In considering the doctrine of tacking (supra, p. 180) we have already said nearly all that is necessary as to the order in which equitable mortgages of all kinds—for in this respect there is no difference among them—rank as regards the order in which they are to be paid out of the mortgaged estate. Two further points may be noticed. In the first place, as between mortgages where the subsequent ones were made without notice of the earlier ones, the earliest one may maintain, or any of the later ones may acquire, priority over the others, not merely by being tacked to the legal mortgage, but if there be no legal mortgage, by being in any way attached to the legal title; as, for instance, by its owner acquiring the legal estate from the mortgagor. In the second place, all equitable mortgages are liable, as long as they remain equitable, to be postponed or defeated by a subsequent legal mortgage, or by a sale of the legal estate for value to a mortgagor or purchaser without notice of their existence. This all follows from the principle before referred to, that where the equities are equal the law shall prevail.

The right to priority of a subsequent purchaser or legal mortgagee without notice is not destroyed by the fact that the legal estate was transferred to him through the fraud of the mortgagor. (Taylor v. Russell, (1892) A. C. 244.) Fraud, however, on the part of a legal mortgagee, or negligence on his part which has enabled the mortgagor to commit a fraud on a subsequent mortgagee, is sufficient to postpone a prior legal mortgagee to even a subsequent equitable mortgagee (Northern Counties of England Insurance Company v. Whipp, 26 Ch. D. 482); but not mere negligence, such as entering into the mortgage without insisting on the production of the title deeds, if he has inquired why these are missing, and has received what he honestly thought a reasonable explanation. (Agra Bank v. Barry, L. R. 7 H. L. 135.) Mere negligence has, however, been held sufficient to postpone a prior equitable mortgagee to a subsequent one. (Ferrand v. Yorkshire Banking Co., 40 Ch. D. 182.)

Forfeiture of Equity of Redemption.—There is one respect in which a mortgage by deposit differs from a legal mortgage and an equitable mortgage by deed. Under 4 & 5

W. & M. c. 16, if a mortgagor grants a second mortgage without disclosing the existence of the prior mortgage to the second mortgagee, he shall, as we have seen, lose his equity of redemption. This act, however, being a penal one, has been construed strictly, and it has been held not to apply where the second mortgage was merely an advance on the security of the title deeds (Kennard v. Futroye, 2 Giff. 81); nor where other lands not included in the prior mortgage were included in the second mortgage. (Stafford v. Selby, 3 Vern. 589.)

And by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 24, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 8, the fraudulent concealment by any seller or mortgagor, or by his solicitor or agent, of any prior incumbrance from a purchaser or mortgagee, is made a misdemeanour, and also renders the party so concealing it liable to an action for damages at the suit of the purchaser or mortgagee. Criminal proceedings under this enactment can be taken only with the sanction of the Attorney or Solicitor-General.

SUB-SECTION 2.

MORTGAGES OF GOODS.

	PAGE	PAGE
Mortgages and Pledges	187	Bills of Sale Acts 188
Pawnbrokers Acts	188

Mortgages and Pledges.—Personalty of an incorporeal kind, such as stock or shares in public companies, can be dealt with in the way of mortgage much on the same principles as apply to interests in land. With this species of property, however, we have at present nothing to do.

Mortgages of goods, or moveable physical objects, on the other hand, differ greatly in their nature from mortgages of land, owing partly to the difference in the nature of land and goods, and partly to special legislation.

Goods may be made a security for a loan, either by a transfer to the creditor of the possession without the legal ownership, or by a transfer of the legal ownership without the possession. In the first instance the security is called a pledge; in the second, a mortgage. In pledges or mortgages the rights of the parties, independent of statute, are much the same. The pledgor or mortgagor is entitled to redeem the article pledged or mortgaged, not merely at the time fixed for the repayment of the loan, but at any time afterwards, as long as the article remains in the mortgagee or pledgee's hands; the pledgee—or pawnee—and the mortgagee, though neither can foreclose the right of redemption, yet have both a power to sell the article on failure of the other party to pay interest or principal of debt. (Carter v. Wake, 4 Ch. D. 605.) The rights of the parties, however, have been greatly altered by the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 93), and the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31, and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), in England; and by the Act to establish the Business of Pawnbroker, 1786 (26 Geo. 3, c. 43 (Irish)); and the Bills of Sale (Ireland) Acts, 1879 and 1883 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 50, and 46 & 47 Vict. c. 71), in Ireland.

Pawnbrokers Acts.—With regard to the effect of the Pawnbrokers Acts on the general law of pledge, it will be sufficient here to state that, while the English and Irish acts differ, both seek to regulate the rights of parties to pledges for small amounts by compelling the pawnbroker to keep records and give tickets as to such pledges, by limiting the amount of interest chargeable on the loan, and by setting out the powers of sale and forfeiture possessed by the pawnbroker, and the rights of redemption possessed by the pledgee.

Bills of Sale Acts.—The Bills of Sale Acts of England (1878 and 1882) and Ireland (1879 and 1883) are practically identical. By a bill of sale is meant any written instrument by which the title to a chattel personal is transferred from one person to another. When the transfer is intended to be an out-and-out assignment, the bill may be called an absolute bill of sale; when it is intended to be as a security for a debt or loan, it may be called a conditional bill of sale. The Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), applies to both absolute and conditional bills of sale, with many exceptions as to absolute bills. The Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), applies to conditional bills only. With absolute bills we have at present nothing to do. Conditional bills of sale, as the words are used in the Acts, practically embrace not merely bills which are transfers of ownership, but all transactions by which goods are made securities for debts while they are left in the possession of the debtor. Mortgages of ships are not within them. (See Appendix D.)

Conditional bills of sale within the acts must be bills (a) given as security for money; (b) on personal chattels; (c) which belong to the grantor of the bill at the time he makes it. (Thomas v. Kelly, 13 App. Cas. 506.) Such bill must be duly attested by a witness or witnesses not party to it, and registered at the Central Office of the Supreme Court within seven days from its making. An affidavit, which must not be made before the solicitor of the grantee or grantor (Baker v. Ambrose, (1896) 2 Q. B. 372), must at the same time be filed setting out (a) the date of making the bill; (b) the residence and occupation of the maker; (c) the residence and occupation of every witness attesting it; and (d) its due making and attestation. (Sect. 10, Act 1878.) If the bill be not duly registered and duly attested, or if it do not set out truly the consideration for which it was granted; or if that consideration be not, at least, 30*l.*, the bill is void in respect of the personal chattels comprised therein. (Sect. 8.) And if it be not in substantial accordance with the form contained in the schedule to the Act it is void for all purposes.

(Sect. 9; Ex parte Stanford, 17 Q. B. D. 259.) An inventory must be attached to the bill in which the goods contained in it are specifically described. To keep it alive the bill must be re-registered every five years.

A bill satisfying the acts is a good mortgage or bill of sale of the goods contained in it, and the grantor of it is not entitled to sell or remove from the premises any of these goods. The grantee, however, is not entitled to seize them, save for the causes set out in sect. 7 of the Act of 1882. These causes are:—(a) default on the part of the grantor of the bill to pay money secured on the bill, or to fulfil any covenant or agreement in it necessary for maintaining the security; (b) the grantor becoming bankrupt or suffering the goods to be distrained for rent, rates, or taxes; (c) the grantor fraudulently removing or suffering the goods to be removed from the premises; (d) the grantor not producing, on the written demand of the grantee, his last receipts for rent, rates, and taxes; (e) the grantor having a judgment execution levied against his goods. On seizure for any of these causes, the grantor has five days to apply to the Court for an order on the grantee forbidding the sale or removal of the goods on payment of debt and costs, and seizure can in every case be prevented by tender of the debt and reasonable costs. Seizure for any other cause—even though under an express power contained in the bill—will be illegal.

When a conditional bill of sale is void under the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882, the grantee is not altogether without a remedy. Merely his right to seize the goods included in the void bill is gone. His action as an ordinary creditor for the money which the bill was intended to secure still remains.

PART IV.

MODES OF ACQUIRING INTERESTS.

	PAGE
Title	191
SECTION I.—TITLE BY ORIGINAL ACQUISITION OF OWNERSHIP	192
SECTION II.—TITLE BY TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP	194
Sub-section (1).— Transfer by Act of Owner	195
Part A. Alienation inter vivos	196
I. Alienation of Land	199
II. Alienation of Goods	215
Part B. Alienations mortis causâ	223
I. Donationes mortis causâ	224
II. Alienation by Will	225
Sub-section (2).— Transfer by Operation of Law	249
Part A. Devolution inter vivos	249
Part B. Devolution mortis causâ	259

Title.—The fact which, in any case, gives or creates ownership over a thing by law ownable is called title.

Now title may arise in either of two ways. It may arise through a person being the first to assert or acquire ownership over a thing at that time unowned, or it may arise through the transfer to a person of the ownership of a thing by its previous owner. In the former case it may be called title by original acquisition of ownership; in the latter, title by transfer of ownership.

SECTION I.

TITLE BY ORIGINAL ACQUISITION OF OWNERSHIP.

	PAGE		PAGE
Original Acquisition	192	A. Occupancy	192
		B. Accession	193

Original Acquisition.—Ownership may be originally acquired either through the taking possession, with the intention of acquiring its ownership, of a thing belonging to nobody, or through new additions being made by nature or industry to a thing already owned. The former mode of acquiring ownership is called occupancy; the latter, accession.

A. Occupancy.—Occupancy, that is, the taking possession with the intention of acquiring ownership of things belonging to nobody, may, as Blackstone repeatedly insists, have been the origin of all private property; but in long-settled countries like England there are few objects now worth occupying which have not long been occupied, and therefore owned. As far as land is concerned, the doctrine of occupancy does not apply, as all land not owned by private persons is, by the theory of English law, vested in the Crown. Formerly an exception to this occurred in the case of an estate pur autre vie, where the tenant died before the cestui que vie. The estate, then, if there were no special occupant, became res nullius, and the first person who took possession was entitled to keep it till the death of the cestui que vie as general occupant, as he was called. (See supra, p. 48.)

The doctrine has more application to goods and chattels. It is a principle of the common law, which has been somewhat modified by franchises such as free warren, &c. (see infra, p. 283), and somewhat altered by the Game Laws (see supra, p. 3), that all wild animals, save such as are in captivity, are res nullius. Accordingly, they become the property of the first person who takes possession of them. The fishermen holds the fish he catches, the sportsman the birds he shoots, by occupancy. Again, things formerly owned, but abandoned by their owner, that is, parted with or thrown away with the intention of giving up the property in them, become res nullius, and may be acquired by the first person who takes possession of them. And the goods of alien enemies, that is, the subjects of a country with which England is at war, are by international law res nullius to English subjects. Before, however, such goods can be taken possession of, the English subject must have the consent of the Crown. This is the ground on which privateering is legal. The rule as to property of alien enemies being res nullius does not extend to property brought by them into England before the war in question broke out. (Wheaton's International Law, Part IV., Chaps. 1 and 2.)

B. Accession.—Accession, that is, the addition by nature, or industry of something new to a thing already owned, has a larger application in a settled country than occupancy. It is the title by which the husbandman owns the crops of his fields, the increase of his flocks, the eggs of his poultry. The fruit of animals belongs to the owner of the female. This rule is subject to a curious exception. It is said that cygnets belong not to the owner of the hen, but to the owners of both birds equally.

The doctrine of accession applies not merely to the produce of land, but to land itself. Thus, in the case of an island rising in a non-tidal river, if it rise in the centre, it belongs in equal parts to the riparian owners on each side of it; if it rise on one side it belongs to the riparian owner on whose side it arises. These results follow from the rule that the bed of a non-tidal river belongs to the riparian owners. Again, if a river gradually washes away the mould from one side, and transfers it to the other, the owner of the latter side is entitled to the additions to his land by accession. The principle here, however, is de minimis non curat lex; for it seems that if a storm carries away a considerable portion of one bank and transfers it to the other, the ownership of the soil carried away remains in the original owner.

Much the same principles apply in the case of the sea shore. The foreshore—that is, the part of the shore between high and low water mark—generally, and the bed of the sea for three miles round the coast, always belong to the Crown. If the tide gradually retreats, the new land belongs not to the Crown, but to the owner of the land adjoining the shore; if it retreats suddenly, or if an island arises in the sea, it belongs to the Crown.

SECTION II.

TITLE BY TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP.

	PAGE		PAGE
Modes of Transfer	194	Sub-sect. 2. Transfer by Opera-
Sub-sect. 1. Transfer by Act of		tion of Law	249
Owner	195

Modes of Transfer.—Title by transfer of ownership may arise either through the ownership being transferred by the voluntary and intentional act of the owner, or by the law transferring the ownership not by the owner's wish or desire, but in consequence of a certain fact or event. The former mode of acquiring ownership may be called transfer by act of owner; the latter, transfer by operation of law.

SUB-SECTION I.

TRANSFER BY ACT OF OWNER.

	PAGE		PAGE
Preliminary Remarks.....	195	Part A. Alienation inter vivos .	196
Alienation	196	Part B. Alienation mortis causa	223

Preliminary Remarks.—We may notice, as a preliminary to the consideration of transfer by act of owner, that it is a principle of the common law that no one can give a better title than he himself has, or, as the maxim puts it, nemo dat quod non habet. This means that if A. has in relation to a thing no right of ownership, or an imperfect right of ownership, A. cannot, by transferring the thing to B., give B. any better or greater right of ownership than A. himself possesses. This, it is to be observed, is a common law rule, and, as we have already seen, does not always apply in equity. (See supra, p. 97.) And even at common law, a considerable number of important exceptions have been made to it. These have been made for the benefit of commerce, and most of them apply to the sale of the objects of commerce—goods. (See infra, p. 216.)

While an owner can, as a rule, never give a better title than he himself has, any disposition he makes is good against him, even though he receives nothing in return—no valuable consideration, as the technical phrase is. Such a disposition is said to be “voluntary.” Formerly, if the subject-matter of it was land, the voluntary grantor might afterwards sell the land for value, and if he did so, the ownership of the land was taken out of the voluntary grantee, and vested in the grantee for value. (27 Eliz. c. 4.) This, however, has been altered by the Voluntary Conveyances Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 21).

But while a voluntary grant of land or goods is now in all cases binding on the grantor as soon as the transfer is complete, yet in many respects it does not convey the same title to the grantee as a grant for value would. For instance, in the case of goods, it never cures a defective title, as a sale sometimes does. (Supra.) Again, if the voluntary grantor becomes bankrupt after making the grant, the voluntary grant may, under certain circumstances, be set aside in favour of the grantor's creditors. (Infra, p. 254.) And lastly, if the effect of making the voluntary grant is to render the estate of the grantor insufficient to pay his debts, it will be void as against his creditors as being made for the purpose of delaying or defeating them within the meaning of 13 Eliz. c. 5, s. 5. (Freeman v. Pope, L. R. 5 Ch. 538.)

Alienations inter vivos and mortis causâ.—When the ownership of a thing is being transferred by the act of the owner, the transfer of ownership may be fixed to take place during the owner's life or at his death. Title, then, arising from the act of the owner may be divided according as it arises by alienation inter vivos or by alienation mortis causâ.

Part A. Alienation inter vivos.

	PAGE		PAGE
Alienation of Land and Goods	196	I. Alienation of Land	199
Title to Land and Goods	197
Modes of Alienating	198	II. Alienation of Goods	215

Alienation of Land and Goods.—This great and obvious distinction exists between land and goods. Land is an actual part of the realm; goods, however valuable and important, are not; they are moveables, and as such have no local habitation. This distinction is recognized in the rule which gives the ultimate ownership of all land to the king as representing the State, in the rule which formerly forbade a foreigner to own land (see infra, p. 328), and in many other rules of English law. Nowhere is it more noticeable than in the law as to alienation by the act of the owner inter vivos.

Land being part and parcel of the realm, its ownership is a matter of public concern. Accordingly, it is, and has always been, the policy of the law to insist that all dealings with the ownership should be open and notorious, and that clear evidence of them should be preserved. To secure this, it has from the earliest times made interests in land transferable only in certain formal modes. The most ancient of these modes is feoffment with livery of seisin, which is coeval apparently with English law; and the most modern is transfer by registration under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), and 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65).

The law has no such interest in the ownership of goods, and accordingly it has never been the policy of the law to insist on interests in goods being transferred in a formal manner. To this day, mere tradition or delivery, with an intention to pass the ownership, is sufficient to give a good title to the thing handed over, however valuable it may be. Any requirements of the law as to writing, or other evidence of a transaction relating to goods, are for the purpose not of protecting the public interest in them—for there is nothing of the kind—but of securing honest dealing between the parties. An exception occurs in the case of ships, the ownership of which, owing to their importance from an international point of view, is a matter of public interest. Special provisions, accordingly, have been made as to the registration of all dealings with property in them. (See Appendix D.)

Title to Lands and Goods.—Another great distinction between land and goods is that to which we have had occasion so often to refer—the existence at common law of limited interests in land and of only absolute interests in goods. This difference has rendered necessary, for the protection of purchasers, a far more thorough investigation of title in the case of purchases of land than in the case of purchases of goods. The possession of goods may be taken as prima facie evidence of absolute ownership; the possession of lands is consistent with a very limited ownership. Hence, in a conveyance of lands for value, the purchaser may, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, insist upon the vendor deducing his title (that is, setting out all dealings with the lands) during a period sufficiently long to render it reasonably certain that the vendor is actually capable of conveying fully the interest which he purports to convey. On a sale of goods the purchaser has no such right.

Another distinction between land and goods is this:—The doctrine of lis pendens applies to land: it does not apply to goods. (Wigram v. Buckley, (1894) 3 Ch. 483.) The doctrine of lis pendens arose out of the old system of real actions for the recovery of land. As has been pointed out, these gave the successful litigant the land itself; while in actions for the recovery of goods, the judgment was merely for the goods or their value. Accordingly, if land, the subject-matter of an action or suit in equity, was sold pending the action, it was bound in the hands of the purchaser by the result of the action. (Co. Litt. 344b.) This is the doctrine of lis pendens. As it operated hardly upon persons who had purchased for value without notice of the pending action, it was enacted that no lis pendens shall affect land until it is registered, and the registration is to be renewed every five years (2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 7), and by a subsequent act (30 & 31 Vict. c. 47, s. 2) the Court can compulsorily vacate the registration of the lis pendens on the determination of the action, or if it thinks the action is not being prosecuted bonâ fide.

Modes of Alienating.—The existence of public interest and of limited ownership at law in land, and its subjection to the doctrine of lis pendens, have made the legal modes of alienation applicable to it very different from the legal modes of alienation applicable to goods. In equity, at one time, the same modes of alienation were applicable equally to land and goods, but even here a distinction was introduced long ago by the Statute of Frauds. (Supra, p. 99.) We will now deal only with legal modes of alienation, because we have already sufficiently dealt with equitable modes, and because in practice the legal modes of alienation are also habitually employed to create and transfer equitable interests.

Differing so greatly as they do, it will be necessary to consider separately the legal modes of alienating land and of alienating goods.

I. Alienation of Land.

PAGE	PAGE
Agreement to Alien 199	(f.) Lease: Chattels Real.. 207
Abstract of Title..... 200	Form of Lease..... 207
Covenants for Title..... 200	Kinds of Rent 208
Freehold and Chattel Interests 201	Covenants in Leases .. 209
(a.) Feoffment..... 203	Covenants running with
(b.) Bargain and Sale 204	Land 210
(c.) Lease and Release 205	Assignments of Leases. 211
(d.) Covenant to stand Seised 206	(g.) Registered Transfer .. 211
(e.) Deed of Grant 206

Agreement to Alien.—Before the actual conveyance takes place there is always in practice an agreement to convey. This agreement, or contract of sale, in order to be enforceable against the parties to it, must be made for value, and must, by sect. 4 of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3), be in writing, signed by the party to be charged. And the writing must identify the land which it is agreed to alien, parol—or oral—evidence not being admissible to prove the particular plot of land to which the agreement was intended to refer. (Plant v. Bourne, 76 L. T. 349.) If, however, in pursuance of a parol agreement to alien, the purchaser enters upon the land, the Court of Chancery will regard this as part performance of the agreement, and will compel the giving or receipt of a grant in the terms verbally agreed upon. (See Hudson v. Henland, (1896) 2 Ch. 428.)

Abstract of Title.—As we have already said, in a conveyance of lands for value, the purchaser may, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, insist upon the vendor's deducing his title during a period sufficiently long to render it reasonably certain that the vendor is actually capable of conveying fully the interest he purports to convey. Such a narrative of the dealings with the land conveyed is called an abstract of title. The purchaser may in general, and subject to any stipulation to the contrary in the contract of sale, require that the abstract shall be carried back for forty years. (Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, sect. 1; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78.) However, his general right to have a complete title shown during the whole of this period, and to rescind his contract of sale if it be not so shown, is, in practice, often curtailed by special stipulations called the conditions of sale. (In re Scott and Alvarez's Contract, (1895) 2 Ch. 603.)

Covenants for Title.—In addition to this investigation of the title, a purchaser can, in the absence of a contrary stipulation, insist upon the vendor entering into covenants for title. The practical effect of these is to give the purchaser a right of action for damages against the vendor, in case the purchaser is disturbed in his possession of the land by reason of any defect of title against which the vendor covenants, or by reason of the vendor's refusal to do any act reasonably necessary for perfecting the conveyance. Prior to 1882, such covenants were set out at length in the conveyance. The ordinary covenants in a conveyance of freeholds for value by an owner beneficially entitled were the following:—(1.) Covenant for right to convey, i.e., that the parties conveying have power to convey the property to the purchaser for the estate expressed to be limited; (2.) Covenant for quiet enjoyment against any lawful disturbance of the purchaser in his enjoyment of the property; (3.) Covenant for freedom from incumbrances, i.e., that the land is not subject to any undisclosed charge; (4.) Covenant for further assurance, i.e., that the vendor will, on being required by the purchaser, do all further acts reasonably necessary for more perfectly assuring to the purchaser the lands conveyed. It is to be noted that all these covenants were qualified, that is, extended only to the acts and omissions of the vendor himself, of those through whom he derived his title otherwise than by way of purchase for value, and of persons claiming under him or them. If the land conveyed were leasehold, a further covenant was added, viz., (5.) for the validity of the lease under which the vendor held.

In conveyances made after the 31st December, 1881, the Conveyancing Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 7 (1) (A)) of that year provides that these covenants shall be implied by the use of the words "as beneficial owner" to describe the character in which the vendor conveys. In a conveyance by a person who conveys and is expressed to convey "as trustee" or "as mortgagee" only, a covenant against incumbrances of his own creation is implied. (Sect. 7 (1) (F).)

Freehold and Chattel Interests.—Freehold interests, as we know, were originally the only interests in land recognized by the law. They, and they alone, were real ownership or part of the real ownership of the land. Chattel interests were originally not recognized by law at all, and when by force of statute they were recognized as interests in the land, they were not regarded as part of its real ownership. They were regarded as rights of user merely, and they were treated as if they were not interests in land, but were merely goods. Accordingly, the old formal contracts which the law required for the transfer of the ownership of land applied only to transfers of freehold interests. Chattel interests, not being common law interests in land, could be transferred as informally as interests in goods. Any formalities now required for the valid transfer of chattel interests are in consequence of comparatively recent Acts of Parliament.

Freehold interests, again, as being parts of the real ownership of the land, carried with them the seisin—that is, the full possession at law; chattel interests, not being parts of the real ownership, did not carry with them the seisin. The Statute of Uses only operates in those cases where the feoffee is seised of land to uses. Accordingly, in the second place, all conveyances operating under that statute apply only where the grantor has a freehold interest.

The ancient common law conveyance of interests in land in possession was feoffment with livery of seisin. The conveyances operating by way of use—that is, under the Statute of Uses,—are: (a) Bargain and sale; (b) Lease and release; ¹ (c) Covenant to stand seised. None of these, then, apply to chattel interests.

Future freehold interests in land could, however, at common law be transferred in a manner different from any of these, though, as a matter of fact, for good reason, they seldom were so transferred.² That other manner was by deed of grant. Freeholds in possession were said to lie in livery; freeholds in expectancy being incorporeal hereditaments lay in grant. By the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 2), it is enacted that freeholds in possession shall lie in grant as well as in livery. Since this enactment, conveyance by deed of grant has practically superseded every other mode of conveying freehold interests of all kinds.

¹ The lease in this case was made by bargain and sale, and operated under the Statute of Uses, and a lease for a period certain might, and may still, be made in the same way in any case where the lessor has a freehold in the land—is seised of it—and value is given for grant of the lease. (See infra, p. 207.) But bargains and sales of leases were never usual, save in cases where it was desired to pass the freehold, and at the same time to escape the need of a livery of seisin.

² The reason was that, when conveyed by grant, it was necessary, in order to make the grant a good conveyance, to prove the existence of the particular estate at the date of the grant, as otherwise there would be no evidence that the interest to be conveyed was future at all. The usual mode of conveying reversions and remainders was by lease and release, or bargain and sale.

The same statute which made a deed of grant sufficient to transfer freehold interests of all kinds made a deed necessary to transfer every chattel interest in land of more than three years in duration. (As to Ireland, see infra, p. 344.) The usual mode, then, of transferring both freehold and chattel interests is come to be by deed. But a deed granting a chattel interest is not called a deed of grant, but a lease under seal, and a deed transferring a lease already granted is called an assignment of a lease. And though deeds of grant and leases and assignments under seal are drawn and construed in much the same manner, still there is (as will be seen) much difference in the operation of each respectively. And, moreover, a lease for not more than three years may still be by parol (see infra, p. 208), though an assignment of a lease must always be by deed.

(a) Feoffment.—Feoffment is the earliest form of conveyance. The essential part of it was livery of seisin, that is, the public delivery of the feudal possession, which was originally made by handing over to the feoffee on the land something symbolic of the possession, as e. g., a turf or twig. This was called livery in deed. Later, it became allowable to deliver possession not on the land, but in sight of it (livery in law). In either case, the livery was accompanied by a statement of the intention to deliver, a declaration of the uses, if any, and a statement of the limitations on which the land was to be held. It became the practice to express these limitations, uses, &c. in writing, called the charter of feoffment. By the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3), s. 1, it was provided that a feoffment without writing, signed by the feoffor, or his agent authorised in writing, should merely create an estate at will. And now, by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, a feoffment must be evidenced by deed. For some time before that a feoffment had been often used as a mode of conveyance by a corporation, but except for this, it had passed out of use, and is now only occasionally used as a mode of conveyance by an infant entitled to convey under the custom of gavelkind. (4 Bac. Abr. 49.)

A peculiar effect of feoffment was what is known as its tortious operation. If a person in possession of land, not the owner, or merely a limited owner, made a feoffment in fee simple, it "operated by wrong" to pass the fee to the feoffee. However, in case the feoffor was a limited owner with remainder to another, and made a feoffment which thus tortiously passed the fee, the remainderman could immediately take possession of the land, i. e., the tortious feoffment was a cause of forfeiture. It is now provided by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 4, that after the 1st October, 1845, a feoffment should not have any tortious operation.

(b) Bargain and Sale.—A bargain and sale was simply a contract for sale. When such a contract was made and the purchase-money paid, the bargainor, as he was called, was considered by the Court of Chancery to hold the land to the use of the bargainee until formal conveyance was made. Then, upon the passing of the Statute of Uses, that statute executed this use in favour of the bargainee, that is, gave him the legal estate in the lands. This obviously furnished a most private method of conveyance. An attempt to defeat it was made by the 27 Hen. VIII. c. 16, which provided that every conveyance by bargain and sale of freehold lands should be enrolled in a court of record within six months of its date.

A bargain and sale required a pecuniary consideration to support it, but this might be merely nominal.

When a testator directed his executors to sell his land, not at the same time devising the land to them, the executors thereby acquired a common law power of alienation, the exercise of which enabled them to transfer the land without themselves having any estate in it. (See supra, p. 146.) The conveyance under this power was made by bargain and sale, which, in this case, did not require enrolment. Nor was a deed necessary; the estate was held to pass to the alienee by force of the will.

(c) Lease and Release.—The 27 Hen. VIII. c. 16, which required bargains and sales of land to be enrolled, referred only to bargains and sales of freehold. If, however, the owner of land in fee simple bargained and sold (for value received) the land for a year, or other chattel interest, a use was raised in favour of the vendee which the Statute of Uses would execute, and which the 27 Hen. VIII. c. 16, would not require to be enrolled. Once the vendee was in legal possession of the land by force of the Statute of Uses, in order to convey to him the fee or any other freehold interest it was not necessary to deliver to him the seisin; all that was necessary was a release to him of the freehold. This mode of conveying was called lease and release, and, as it needed neither livery of seisin nor enrolment, it soon became the usual mode of granting freehold interests. It was provided by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21, that a release of freehold estate, made after the 15th of May, 1841, and expressed to be made in pursuance of that act, should be as effectual as if a lease for a year had preceded it. However, shortly afterwards, the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property was passed, and conveyance by lease and release was superseded. (See supra, p. 203.) A release, however, still is in use in three cases:—

- (i.) for conveying an estate in expectancy to a person having an estate in possession, so as to produce merger;
- (ii.) between joint tenants and coparceners;

- (iii.) for extinguishing rights over land less than the full ownership, by conveyance thereof to the owner.

(d) Covenant to stand Seised.—This was an agreement made upon good consideration that the covenantor would henceforth hold the land in question to the use of the covenantee. Upon this the Statute of Uses operated so as to execute the use, that is, to give the legal estate to the covenantee. Good consideration is said to be the consideration of blood or marriage; the covenant is expressed to be made in consideration of the natural love and affection of the covenantor towards one who is either a blood relation, or the husband or wife (or intended husband or wife) of a blood relation.

(e) Deed of Grant.—Since the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 2), as has been said, deed of grant has become the usual mode of conveyance for freehold interests both in possession and in expectancy.

A deed is an instrument in writing under seal. It is expressed to be “signed, sealed, and delivered” by the parties to it. Delivery is effected by the party touching the seal, and using some such words as, “I deliver this as my act and deed”; and in practice the fact of such signature and delivery is always attested by one or more witnesses. A deed takes effect from the time of its delivery; it may, however, be delivered subject to some condition, in which case it is inoperative until the condition be performed, but then takes effect as from the original delivery. A deed so delivered is called an escrow. If there be only one party to a deed, it is called a deed-poll; if more than one, an indenture. A deed which transfers any interest in property must, under the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 54 and 55, bear a stamp representing a value proportionate to the value of the property dealt with.

A deed of grant is drawn up in a few simple sentences. No punctuation is used, but instead each new sentence is begun by the phrase "Now this indenture witnesseth," in capital letters. It proceeds upon a regular form or framework, which enables any one acquainted with deeds of grant to turn at once to any portion of it which he wishes to consult without searching for it throughout the whole instrument. In a deed of grant in which all the parts are fully set out, this form is as follows: (a) Date; (b) Parties; (c) Recital of title; (d) Recital of contract; (e) Testatum; (f) Consideration; (g) Receipt; (h) Operative words; (i) Parcels; (j) Habendum; (k) Estate; (l) Covenants. In practice, however, (c) and (d) are often omitted, especially where the property transferred is small. A reference to the form and notes in Appendix E will probably give the reader a clearer notion of a deed of grant than could any mere dissertation on it.

(f) Lease.—A lease is the first mode in which chattel interests in land are acquired. It applies to the creation of a leasehold interest out of an estate of freehold or out of another leasehold interest larger in point of duration. It is sometimes called a demise.

A lease, then, may be defined as an assurance whereby the possession of land is granted by one person (called the lessor) to another (called the lessee) for an interest smaller in point of duration than the lessor's in consideration usually of a money payment at fixed periods, called the rent. At common law this grant gives rise to no estate until it is followed by entry of the lessee on the land: till entry the lessee has only an interesse termini, an interest in the term; that is, a right to enter. This interesse termini, however, like a mortgagor's equity of redemption, is transferable and devolves as an estate. But if the lease is one taking effect under the Statute of Uses, entry is not necessary to complete the lessee's title.

Form of Lease.—Since the common law regarded a lease as merely a contract between lessor and lessee, it could be made by word of mouth, or by parol, as it is called. However, the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3), ss. 1, 4, provided that a lease for a period of three years or more, or on which the rent reserved was less than two-thirds of a rack rent, should, if not made in writing, only give rise to an estate at will: and then the effect of the Act to Amend the Law of Real Property (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 3, necessitated its being made by deed. An agreement to grant a lease must be in writing. An instrument not being a deed intended as a lease may operate as an agreement to grant a lease, of which the Court will enforce specific performance. If the lessee enters into possession under such an agreement, the rights and liabilities of lessor and lessee are the same as if the lease had actually been granted (Walsh v. Lonsdale, 21 Ch. D. 9); in other words, the lessee holds under the terms of the draft lease. As Lord Esher put it in Suain v. Ayres (21 Q. B. D. 293), "when there is such a state of things that a Court of Equity would compel specific performance of an agreement for a lease by the execution of a lease, both in the Equity and Common Law Divisions the case ought to be treated as if such a lease had been granted and was actually then in existence. . . . The tenant must be treated in law as holding on the same terms that would be introduced into a lease executed in pursuance of the terms of the agreement for a lease."

The chief incidents both of leases for lives which convey freehold interests, and of leases for years or other time certain which convey chattel interests, have been already set out (supra, pp. 53, 68). All that need now be referred to is the different kinds of rents reserved, and of covenants to be found, in leases.

Kinds of Rent.—In ordinary agricultural leases the rent reserved is generally a fixed sum (supra, p. 75). In mining leases it is generally a royalty, that is, a sum varying with the quantity of minerals, &c. raised by the lessee; though in these cases there is usually a fixed minimum sum also reserved, called a dead rent. A peppercorn rent is a nominal rent; it is generally the rent reserved in building leases during the first few years of the tenancy while the buildings are still in course of erection. A rack rent is the full annual value of the land including all improvements.

Covenants in Leases.—A lease almost invariably contains agreements both by the lessor and lessee for the better securing that the value of the land demised shall be kept up, and for facilitating the lessor's remedy against the lessee in certain events.

(1.) Covenants by the Lessor.—It would seem that from the use of the word "demise" the law implies a covenant for quiet enjoyment, and also, perhaps, a covenant for title. (Hart v. Windsor, 12 M. & W. 68.) It is doubtful whether either of these covenants is "unqualified"—that is, makes the lessor liable to compensate the lessee for acts done in contravention of them by any person whatever. (Burnett v. Lynch, 5 B. & C. 589; but see Baynes & Co. v. Lloyd & Sons, (1895) 2 Q. B. 610.) As the liability of the lessor implied from the word "demise" is so uncertain, it is the practice to insert express covenants by the lessor for title and quiet enjoyment, but "qualified," that is, limiting the lessor's liability to his own acts or those of persons claiming through him. These express covenants, therefore, do not guarantee the lessee against eviction by title paramount.

(2.) Covenants by the Lessee.—There are a number of covenants on the part of the lessee called "usual covenants," upon the insertion of which in a lease the landlord can insist without any express stipulation in the agreement to lease to that effect. What are usual covenants would, it seems, vary from time to time with the practice of conveyancers (per Jessel, M. R., in Hampshire v. Wickens, 7 Ch. D. 555), but at the present day they seem in an ordinary lease to be limited to the following :—

- (a) Covenant to pay the rent (supra, p. 76);
- (b) Covenant to pay rates and taxes upon the property, except landlord's property tax and tithe rent-charge;
- (c) Covenant to keep and deliver up the premises in repair;
- (d) Covenant giving the lessor a right to enter at intervals upon the premises for the purpose of inspecting their state of repair. (See Dav. Prec., Vol. V., Pt. 1, p. 51.)

As has been said, these are the only covenants which can be insisted upon on an "open contract"; but there are a few others which are frequently inserted. Of these, the commonest are covenants by the lessee to insure the premises, not to commit waste, not to use the premises in particular ways, and not to assign or underlet the premises without the lessor's permission.

As to waiver of covenants and relief in case of their breach, see pp. 72, 73, supra.

Covenants running with the Land.—Of the lessee's covenants, all the implied and some of the express "run with the land," that is, can be enforced by the lessor against not merely the original lessee, but also against his assigns. The general rule as to express covenants is, that covenants relating to something in existence on the land can be enforced against the assigns without their being named; covenants relating to something not yet in existence, but which, when it comes into existence, will relate to the land, can be enforced against the assigns only if they are named; covenants merely collateral, that is, relating to something not connected with the land, cannot be enforced against the assigns even if named. (Spencer's Case, 5 Co. 16; 1 Sm. L. C.) How far the first two parts of this rule have been altered, if at all, by sect. 58 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), is not very clear.

Assignments of Leases.—Like demises, assignments of leases must be made by deed. In an assignment, the assignor parts with his whole interest. If he reserves a reversion of even a day, this makes the transaction an underlease. In Ireland, however, a tenant may make a sub-letting of his whole interest, which shall not be an assignment. (See sect. 3, Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1860; and Seymour v. Quirke, 14 L. R. Ir. 97.) The distinction between the two is important, since an assignee is liable to the original lessor for the breaches of those covenants which run with the land, while an underlessee is not personally liable to the original lessor, but to the sub-lessor, for breaches of covenant in the lease. (Beardman v. Wilson, L. R. 4 C. P. 57.)

The form of an assignment is practically the same as a conveyance of freeholds. As to covenants for title in an assignment of leaseholds for valuable consideration, see p. 200, supra. (Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 7 (A).)

Notwithstanding the assignment, the original lessee still remains liable to the lessor (even though the lessor has accepted rent from the assignee) for the performance of the covenants entered into by him.¹ Accordingly, he can insist on the assignee entering into a covenant to pay the rent and perform the covenants and conditions in question, and to "save the vendor harmless," indemnify him that is, against any breaches by him or subsequent assigns.

(g) Registered Transfer.—A new mode of transferring both freehold and leasehold interests has been introduced by the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 and 1897 (38 & 39 Vict.

¹ It is otherwise in Ireland. Under sect. 16 of Landlord and Tenant Act, 1860, if the landlord has testified his consent to the assignment in the prescribed form, he is deemed to have released the original lessee.

c. 87, and 60 & 61 Vict. c. 65). The acts, however, apply only to England, and only to lands registered under these acts, and registration is still optional. Powers, however, of making it compulsory in given districts, upon the sale of any interest within the acts, have been reserved in the Act of 1897 (sect. 20), and so this mode of transfer may soon become important.

In an elementary work of this kind it is impossible to give more than an outline of the new system these acts are intended to introduce. Briefly, under the Act of 1875 two registers of land are established, one for the registration of fees simple (sect. 5), and one for the registration of leaseholds for a life or lives, or determinable on a life or lives, or for a term of years of which more than twenty-one are unexpired (sect. 7). The leaseholds must, however, be derived either immediately or mediately from freeholds (sect. 2), the act having no reference to copyhold lands. Settled land may, under sect. 6 of the Act of 1897, be registered by the tenant for life. A fee simple may be registered either with an absolute or qualified title, and nothing less than a possessory title will be entitled to registration. Before registration the registrar makes an inquiry as to the applicant's title, and must be satisfied that the title, whether absolute or qualified, is good, before it can be registered. (Sects. 6, 7, 8, and 9, Act of 1875.) In the same way, after investigation, leaseholds may be registered either with or without a declaration of the title of the lessor to grant the lease. (Sect. 11, Act of 1875.) The registration of a fee simple with an absolute title vests a fee simple in the registered proprietor, subject to the incumbrances (if any) set out in the register, and to such liabilities as easements, obligations ratione tenuræ, rights to mines or minerals and franchises, unless the contrary is set out in the register (sect. 18, Act of 1895), and subject also to any trusts affecting the land in the hands of the registered proprietor. (Sect. 7.) In the same way the first registered proprietor of a leasehold, with a declaration of the lessor's right to grant the lease, has vested in him the possession of the land for all the leasehold estate therein described subject to the provisions of the lease, to registered incumbrances, to obligations, such as easements, &c., and to trusts. (Sect. 13.) Trusts are not to be set out in the register. (Sect. 83 (1).) An elaborate system of appeals from the decision of the registrar, of cautions as to the registration of land in which the cautioner claims an interest, and of rectification of the register, is established for the purpose of preventing erroneous or fraudulent registration, and provision is made by sect. 7 of the Act of 1897 for indemnification of persons injured by erroneous registration where rectification of the register is not possible under the principal act.

On the registration of a fee simple, absolute or qualified, the title deeds are stamped to show that the land is registered (sect. 72), and a land certificate is given to the registered proprietor (sect. 10); and on the registration of a leasehold the lease is deposited with the registrar, and an office copy will be given if required to the registered proprietor of the lease, with a statement indorsed thereon as to whether any declaration has been made concerning the title of the lessor to make the lease. (Sect. 16.)

After registration every disposition of, charge upon, and lease for lives or for more than twenty-one years, of the registered land, must be made by way of registration. Dispositions are made by delivery of the land certificate or office copy of the lease, and entry on the register of the transferee as proprietor of the registered fee simple or leasehold. (Sects. 29 and 34.) The land certificate or office copy of the lease must be produced at such disposition to the registrar, who makes a note of such entry upon it. (Sect. 8, Act of 1897.) Charges are made by an entry of the charge on the register, and the issue to the person entitled to the charge of a certificate of charge. (Sect. 22, Act of 1875.) The provisions of sects. 19, 20, 21 (except sub-sects. 1 and 4), 22, 23, and 24 of the Conveyancing

Act, 1881, apply to registered charges. (See supra, p. 175.)

The evidence of title which may be required by a purchaser of registered land is set out in sect. 16 of the Act of 1897:—

“(1.) A purchaser of registered land shall not require any evidence of title, except—

- (i.) the evidence to be obtained from an inspection of the register or of a certified copy of, or extract from, the register;
- (ii.) a statutory declaration as to the existence or otherwise of matters which are declared by section eighteen of the principal act and by this act not to be incumbrances;
- (iii.) if the proprietor of the land is registered with an absolute title, and there are incumbrances entered on the register as subsisting at the first registration of the land, either evidence of the title to those incumbrances, or evidence of their discharge from the register;
- (iv.) where the proprietor of the land is registered with a qualified title, the same evidence as above provided in the case of absolute title, and such evidence as to any estate, right, or interest excluded from the effect of the registration as a purchaser would be entitled to if the land were unregistered;
- (v.) if the land is registered with a possessory title, such evidence of the title subsisting or capable of arising at the first registration of the land as the purchaser would be entitled to if the land were unregistered.

“(2.) Where the vendor of registered land is not himself registered as proprietor of the land or of a charge giving a power of sale over the land, he shall, at the request of the purchaser and at his own expense, and notwithstanding any stipulation to the contrary, either procure the registration of himself as proprietor of the land or of the charge, as the case may be, or procure a transfer from the registered proprietor to the purchaser.

“(3.) In the absence of special stipulation, a vendor of land registered with an absolute title shall not be required to enter into any covenant for title, and a vendor of land registered with a possessory or qualified title shall only be required to covenant against estates and interests excluded from the effect of registration, and the implied covenants under section seven of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, shall be construed accordingly.”

Where the registration was voluntary, the registered proprietor may at any time have the land removed from the registry on the delivery up of the land certificate, or office copy of the lease, and thereupon no further entries will be made in the register. (Sect. 17, Act of 1897.)

As has been said, the Land Transfer Acts apply only to England (sect. 2 of Act of 1875); but there are in force in Ireland other statutes following the same lines. An abstract of these is contained in Appendix C.

II. Alienation of Goods.

	PAGE		PAGE
Title to Goods	215	(c.) Sale	219
Modes of Alienation	217	Implied Conditions and
(a.) Gift and Delivery	217	Warranties	220
(b.) Deed of Gift.....	218	When Property passes..	221
		Position of Parties	222
		(d.) Bill of Lading	223

Title to Goods.—As has been stated, the rule of the common law, that no one can give a better title to a thing than he himself possesses, applies to alienations of goods as well as to alienations of land. But in the case of goods there are considerable exceptions to it. The most important of these are as follows :—

(a) Sales in Market Overt.—In the City of London every shop in which goods are publicly exhibited for sale is market overt on every week day for such goods as the shopkeeper openly professes to deal in, though not for the purchase of such goods when the purchaser is the shopkeeper. (Hargreave v. Spink, (1892) 1 Q. B. 25.) Out of the City of London, market overt is the public market held on certain days by charter or prescription. (Case of Market Overt, 5 Rep. 83 b.) It is provided by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 22 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71, see p. 219, infra), that a buyer of goods in market overt, buying them in good faith and without notice (i.e., knowledge or means of knowledge) that the seller's title is defective, acquires a good title to the goods sold. This, however, does not affect the law as to the sale of horses, which is subject to special statutory provisions (2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 7; 31 Eliz. c. 12).¹ Even though the goods in question have been stolen, the property passes in the first instance to the innocent purchaser, but subject to this condition, that if the thief is prosecuted to conviction, the property re-vests in the owner or his personal representatives, notwithstanding the intermediate dealings, whether by sale in market overt or otherwise. Where goods are held by a seller by a voidable title, as, for instance, when he has obtained them from the true owner by fraud or other wrongful means, if they are sold to an innocent purchaser before the voidable title was made void, even though the sale was not in market overt, the purchaser will take a good title, and the property in the goods will not re-vest in the true owner merely by reason of the conviction of the seller. (Sects. 23, 24; see Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 App. Cas. 459.)

¹ It seems doubtful whether a modern market, established under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, is or is not market overt. In Ireland, the Queen's Bench Division have held that it is (Ganly v. Ledwidge, 1 I. R. 10 C. L. 33); in England, Cockburn, C.J., held, that a market established under a local act is not market overt. (Moyce v. Newington, 4 Q. B. D. 34.)

(b) Dispositions of Goods by Mercantile Agents.—Under the Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), dispositions of goods made by such agents in the ordinary course of business to persons dealing with them in good faith and without notice of the agent's want of authority to dispose of the goods, give a good title to such innocent disponees.

(c) Delivery of Current Coin.—"Money cannot be recovered after it has passed in currency; in the case of money stolen, the true owner cannot recover it after it has been paid away fairly and honestly upon a valuable and bonâ fide consideration." (Per Lord Mansfield, Miller v. Race, 1 Burr. 452; 1 Sm. L. C.)

(d) Estoppel.—The vendee may also have by estoppel against the true owner a better title than the vendor had, where the owner is by his conduct precluded from denying the seller's authority to sell. (Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 21.)

Modes of Alienation of Goods.—Chattels, or choses in possession, are assignable by the act of the owner inter vivos in four ways: (a) by gift and delivery; (b) by deed of gift; (c) by sale; (d) by indorsement and delivery of bill of lading.

(a) Gift and Delivery.—Where the owner of a chattel gives it to another, declaring by words or by writing not under seal his intention to transfer the ownership, and also transfers the possession of the chattel, there is a complete gift, and the chattel becomes the property of the donee. There has been considerable doubt as to whether actual delivery of the chattel is indispensable to a gift. It has now been decided that delivery is necessary to all gifts not made by deed. (Cochrane v. Moore, 25 Q. B. D. 57; following Irons v. Smallpiece, 2 B. & A. 551.) "In ordinary English language," it is there said, "and in legal effect, there cannot be a 'gift' without a giving and taking." (Per Lord Esher, M. R., 25 Q. B. D. 76.) Delivery consists in the voluntary transfer of possession from one person to another; that is, "the deliveror, by some apt and manifest act, puts the deliverer in the same position of control over the thing, either directly or through a custodian, which he held himself immediately before that act." (Pollock & Wright on Possession, p. 46.)

Where, however, the thing was in the possession of the donee before the gift was made, to make the gift effective it is not necessary that the thing should be restored to the owner and re-delivered by him to the donee. A change in the character in which the thing is held is sufficient to support the gift. (Kilpin v. Ratley, (1892) 1 Q. B. 582.)

(b) Deed of Gift.—A gift of chattels may also be made by deed, and in this case the property in the chattel vests in the donee upon the execution of the deed, whether the possession has been transferred or not, unless and until he repudiates the gift; and acceptance is presumed until dissent is signified. Delivery is not necessary because a deed imports a valuable consideration, and, therefore, the donee under a deed of gift, if the thing given is afterwards refused him, can as a purchaser sue and recover it.

It is to be remembered that a gift, whether by parol or by deed, may be made subject to any conditions which the donor pleases to put upon it, and is then incomplete until the donee fulfils such conditions. And so long as a gift is incomplete, whether by reason of some condition remaining to be fulfilled or of the property not having been completely transferred, it may be revoked by the donor; or, in other words, there is a locus pœnitentiæ while a gift is incomplete. An example of a gift made subject to an implied condition occurs in the case of presents made by a man to the lady to whom he is betrothed; the condition here is that if the engagement is broken off by the lady, the presents shall be returned. (Robinson v. Cumming, 2 Atk. 409.) But the most important class of conditional gifts consists of donationes mortis caudæ, where the implied condition is that the gift is to take effect only in the event of the donor's death. These will be treated of in the next section, along with wills. (Infra, p. 224.)

(c) Sale.—By far the most important mode of alienation of goods inter vivos is by sale—a contract in which the seller transfers, or agrees to transfer, the property in goods to the buyer for a money consideration called the price. (Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 1.) Its two characteristic elements are: that the property in the thing sold passes to the buyer at such time as the parties to the contract intend it to pass, although the possession may not then have been transferred; and second, that this transfer of property is made in return for a money consideration. If any other consideration than money be given, the transaction is not a sale, but a special contract for the transfer of property. The law as to the sale of goods has now been consolidated in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), which we will proceed to consider.

The general rule as to the form of the contract of sale is, that no special form is required: it may be verbal, in writing, or implied from the conduct of the parties. (Sect. 3.) To this, however, there are two important exceptions:—

(1.) The transfer of a British ship must be made by bill of sale, in the form provided by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), and executed, witnessed, and registered as that act requires. (Sects. 24—26.)

(2.) An exception so wide as almost to swallow up the rule is that introduced by the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, which was further defined by Lord Tenterden's Act (9 Geo. IV. c. 14).

The provisions on this point of both the Statute of Frauds and Lord Tenterden's Act are now embodied in the Sale of Goods Act, s. 4, which provides that a contract of sale of any goods of the value of 10*l.* or upward shall not be enforceable by action unless the buyer accept part of the goods and actually receive them, or give something in earnest to bind the contract or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract be made and signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf. This applies although the goods are intended to be delivered at a future time, or are not actually made or procured or provided at the time of the contract. (Sect. 4 (2).) The acceptance referred to is defined as any act of the buyer in relation to the goods recognizing a pre-existing contract of sale. (Sect. 4 (3); Abbott & Co. v. Wolsey, (1895) 2 Q. B. 97.) The memorandum must set out the names or sufficient description of the buyer and seller, the goods sold, the price, if agreed on, and all other material terms in the contract.

Sale: Implied Conditions and Warranties.—There are certain conditions and warranties implied in a contract for the sale of goods analogous to the covenants for title implied in a sale of land. In every such sale there are implied a condition of the seller's right to sell, and warranties of quiet possession of the goods sold and of their freedom from any undisclosed incumbrance. (Sect. 12.) Where the sale was made by means of a description or sample, a condition is implied that the goods shall correspond to the description or sample. (Sects. 13, 15.) As to quality, conditions are implied in two cases: (a) where the seller sold the goods for an express purpose, and the buyer has made it clear that he relied on the seller's judgment as to their fitness for the purpose, there is an implied condition that the goods shall be reasonably fit for that purpose; (b) where the buyer bought by description from a seller who deals in the goods sold, there is an implied condition that the goods shall be of merchantable quality. (Sect. 14.)

A breach of condition entitles the buyer to repudiate the contract of sale; a breach of warranty merely gives him a claim for damages ; but the buyer, if he pleases, may elect to treat a breach of condition as a breach of warranty, and sue on it for damages without repudiating the contract, and the buyer must so treat the breach if he has accepted part of the goods sold under an entire contract or, in the case of a sale of specific goods, when the property has passed to him. (Sect. 11.)

When the Property passes.—It has been already said that the sale transfers the property in the goods sold at such time as the parties intend it to be transferred. For ascertaining this intention, it is provided in general terms that regard shall be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, and the circumstances of the case. (Sect. 17.) But the accurate ascertainment of this time is of great importance, since prima facie “the risk passes with the property,” that is, in the event of the goods being destroyed, the loss falls upon the person whose property they then are. (Sect. 20.) Accordingly, the act lays down a number of rules by which, in the absence of a contrary intention, the time when the property passes is to be fixed : when specific goods are sold in a deliverable state, the property passes when the contract is made ; when any act remains to be done by the seller to make the goods deliverable, or when the seller has to weigh, measure, or test the goods in order to ascertain the price, the property does not pass till such acts are done and the buyer has notice thereof ; if the goods are sent “on approval,” the property passes when the buyer does any act adopting the transaction (Kirkham v. Attenborough, (1897) 1 Q. B. 201), or retains the goods for more than a reasonable time without signifying his rejection ; and finally, when unascertained or “future” goods are sold by description, the property passes when such goods are unconditionally appropriated to the contract by either seller or buyer with the other’s assent. The commonest mode of “unconditional appropriation” is the seller’s delivering the goods to a carrier for transmission to the buyer, reserving no right of disposition.

Position of the Parties.—(1.) Of the Seller.—It is the seller's duty to deliver the goods, as it is the buyer's to pay for them (sect. 27) ; and these, unless otherwise agreed, are concurrent conditions, that is, the seller must be ready and willing to give possession of the goods to the buyer in return for the price, and vice versâ. (Sect. 28.) An unpaid seller has various rights with regard to the goods. First, he has what is called a vendor's lien over them ; that is, he may retain possession of the goods until he is paid. Second, if he is still retaining possession, and payment is delayed for an unreasonably long time, he may re-sell. Third, if, when the goods have left his possession and are on their way to the buyer, he discovers that the buyer is insolvent, he has a right of stoppage in transitu (sects. 39 and 44), that is, he may resume possession of the goods (either by actually taking possession, or by giving the carrier notice of his claim) and hold them till payment or tender of the price. (Sect. 46.) If the goods have come into the buyer's possession, and he wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay, the seller has a right of action against him for the price (sect. 49) ; if the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to accept the goods, he may be sued for damages for non-acceptance. (Sect. 50.)

(2.) Of the Buyer.—The buyer has a right to have the goods delivered to him according to the terms of the contract, and if the seller wrongfully neglects or refuses to do so, the buyer has a right of action for damages for non-delivery. (Sect. 51.) If the property in the goods has passed by the contract, the buyer can also sue in trover, or for specific performance. (Sect. 52.) In the absence of a contrary agreement, the place of delivery is the seller's place of business or residence, unless the goods are specific and are known to the parties to be elsewhere, when the place where the goods are is the place of delivery. (Sect. 29.)

(d) Bills of Lading.—A bill of lading is a receipt for goods shipped, given by the shipmaster as agent for the owners of the ship to the owner of the goods or his agent, coupled with an undertaking to deliver the goods in question to the shipper, a consignee, or their assigns. Since it is obviously for the convenience of commerce that the goods should be capable of being dealt with while still on the voyage, it is a rule of the law merchant that the property in the goods may be transferred by indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading. The shipowner is, therefore, bound to deliver the goods to the assignee who presents the bill of lading. And by the Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), the transfer of the bill of lading operates also as an assignment of the contract contained in it, so that the transferee can sue on that contract in his own name, and is liable upon it exactly as if he had been originally a party to it.

Part B. Alienations mortis causâ.

	PAGE		PAGE
Alienations mortis causâ	223	I. Donationes mortis causâ ..	224
		II. Alienation by Will	225

Alienations mortis causâ.—Alienations mortis causâ are transfers of interests in things made in view of the transferor's death, and in their nature revocable by the transferor at his will and pleasure at any time before his death. They are divided according as the alienation is to take effect immediately, or is not to take effect until the death of the alienor. In the first case, the transfer is called alienation by donatio mortis causâ; in the latter, alienation by will or testament. The latter is incomparably the more important.

I. Donationes Mortis Causâ.

Donationes mortis causâ.—As has been said, a donatio mortis causâ is an immediate gift made by a man in expectation of speedy dissolution. The gift is subject to two conditions arising out of its nature: firstly, that should the donor recover—that is, should the expected dissolution not then take place—the gift is ipso facto void; and secondly, that the donor in any event may expressly revoke the gift at any time before his death. He cannot, however, revoke it by his will.

The gift must be evidenced by delivery either of the thing given or of the means of obtaining it—such, for instance, as the keys of the box in which it is contained. (Mustapha v. Wedlake, W. N. (1891) 21.) The delivery must be made by the donor himself, or by some other person in his presence, and by his direction: and it must be made to the donee or an agent of his. As in the case of gifts inter vivos, if the chattel is already in the possession of the donee, no re-delivery to him is necessary. (Cain v. Moon, (1896) 2 Q. B. 283.) Originally, only things the ownership in which passed by delivery without further act on the donor's part could pass under a donatio mortis causâ, but now certain other things may be so given, such as mortgage securities, bills of exchange payable to order and not indorsed, policies of assurance, cheques. (Veal v. Veal, 27 Beav. 303.) These, however, may be regarded, perhaps, rather as cases of the delivery of the means of obtaining the things given than as cases of the delivery of the thing itself. (In re Mead, Austin v. Mead, 15 Ch. D. 651.)

A donatio mortis causâ may be impressed with a condition binding upon the donee if such condition was attached to it at the time delivery was made by the donor. The most common condition is one that the donee shall pay for the donor's funeral. (Hills v. Hills, 8 M. & M. 401.)

Donationes mortis causâ are subject to the same death duties as gifts under wills. Like these, too, they are liable, on a deficiency of assets, to the donor's debts. And even at common law they could always be made to the donor's wife.

II. Alienation by Will.

	PAGE		PAGE
Description of a Will	225	Construction of Wills: General
History of Wills	226	Rule	237
Effect of History	227	Construction of Wills: Special
Wills of Realty and Personalty	228	Rules	238
Execution of Wills	231	Kinds of Legacies	243
Domicile and Execution	234	Position of Executors	244
Republication of Will	235	Duties of Executors	246
Revocation of Wills	236	Rights of Executors	246

Description of a Will.—A will or testament is a conveyance intended to come into operation on the death, and only on the death, of the grantor. Until that event it has no effect whatever, and until that event the grantor is entitled to alter or revoke it at his will and pleasure. This is what is meant by the phrase that a will is ambulatory till death.

A codicil is an addition to a will, executed subsequently to the will itself and with the same formalities as a will. It is considered part of the will to which it is attached, or, as is usually said, it is to be read with the will. In so far as its terms are inconsistent with the will, it revokes or overrules the will. (Morley v. Rennoldson, (1895) 1 Ch. 449.)

The person who makes a will is called the testator, if a man; testatrix, if a woman. A gift under a will is called a devise if the gift is of realty; a legacy or bequest if the gift is of personalty. The person taking such a gift is called a devisee if the gift is of realty, a legatee if the gift is of personalty, and in either case, a beneficiary. If persons are appointed by the will to carry out the wishes of the testator as to the disposal of his estate they are called the executors of the will; if persons are not appointed by the will to carry out the testator's wishes, then, should the property disposed of by the will include personalty, and in the case of testators dying on or after the 1st of January, 1898, whether it include personalty or not (Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 1 (1), (3)), the Court will appoint such persons, and they will in that case be called administrators with the will annexed. (See infra, p. 245.)

History of Wills.—As these terms sufficiently indicate, the idea of a will or testament is of Roman origin. It seems to have been unknown to the ancient Common Law of England. Originally, on the death of the owner of land or goods, the land or goods devolved on the deceased owner's surviving relatives according to the rules of descent and succession unaffected by any act or desire on his part. Testamentary power was first established with regard to goods—indeed, strictly speaking, a testament still means a will dealing only with personalty—and it was established chiefly through the influence and learning of Churchmen, whose study of the civil law made them well acquainted with the conception of a will. At first the power only applied to a portion of the testator's personalty—namely, that portion of it to which neither widow nor children were entitled under the rules of succession—but gradually it was extended to all of it save in places where the old law survived as a special custom, and as to these in later times the special custom was abolished by statute. (See 2 Bl. Com. 493.) And now by sect. 3 of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26), testamentary power has been extended to all the personal estate which the testator at his decease shall be entitled to either at law or in equity.

The history of testamentary power over freehold lands is somewhat different. Here, again, its introduction was due to the influence and learning of ecclesiastics.¹ As has already been pointed out, feoffments to the use of the feoffor's will were protected and enforced by the early clerical chancellors, no doubt largely in the interests of the Church. Such feoffments were put an end to by the Statute of Uses. Testamentary power was, however, very shortly afterwards re-established over fee simple land by the Statutes of Wills (32 Hen. VIII. c. 1; 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 5). By these statutes a holder of such lands by tenure of knight-service was entitled to devise two-thirds of them, while a holder in socage could devise them all. (Co. Litt. 111 b.) By the Act Abolishing Military Tenures, tenure in socage became universal, and with it testamentary power over fee simple lands became universal too. As to estates pur autre vie, the only other kind of freehold estates that, strictly speaking, may survive their owner, these were made subject to the tenant's last will by sect. 12 of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3). This section, and also the Statutes of Wills, have been repealed by sect. 2 of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26); but by sect. 3 of the same statute it is enacted that every person not under disability is entitled to devise all real estate to which he shall be entitled at the time of his death, and real estate is to include any estate, right, or interest, other than a chattel interest in any hereditaments, and "all rights of entry for conditions broken, or other rights of entry."

Effect of History.—Wills of goods, then, and wills of freehold land, were both introduced by the influence of the Church. In the case of wills of goods, however, the influence of the Church continued to mould the law until quite recent times; while in the case of wills of freehold, the influence of the Church ended with the introduction of statutory testamentary power : after that, the law relating to them was moulded by express enactment, and by the policy of the ordinary courts of law. This difference in the history of wills of personalty and wills of realty led to considerable differences in the law with regard to these. These differences concerned chiefly two points: the execution of wills, and the operation of wills after the death of the testator. Most of the differences on the former point were swept away by the Wills Act, and some of those on the latter point were abolished by that act, and now by the Land Transfer Act, 1897, the remainder will, as far as England is concerned, shortly disappear. The latter act, however, does not apply to Ireland at all, and in England it applies only in the case of testators dying on or after 1st January, 1898. The old law, then, is still of great importance in both countries.

¹ From very early times customs to devise have been legally recognized as obtaining in certain places. How these arose it is now very difficult to say.

Wills of Realty and of Personalty.—The primary difference, then, which has hitherto characterized the operation of wills of realty and wills of personalty is this. A will of realty has been in almost every way simply an ordinary conveyance of land from the testator to the devisee from the death of the testator. A will of personalty has been not an ordinary gift of goods by deed or other writing, but resembles a form of universal succession as existing under the civil law.

This difference shows itself most markedly in two respects: (a) In the way in which the law regards the will itself; and (b) in the effect of the will in transmitting the ownership of the property included under it.

(a) In the case of a will of realty, the law hitherto has regarded the will simply as a conveyance between two private persons, with which it has nothing more to do than with any other such conveyance. It supplies no means by which the validity of the will may be once for all established, and it insists on no further registration or record being kept of it than of any other conveyance affecting the land in question.

In the case of a will of personalty, on the other hand, the law regards the will as a public instrument. It insists that the will shall be handed over to its custody, and that before doing so it shall be satisfied that the instrument is a validly-executed will. Where there is no contest as to the will's validity, this proof is merely formal—usually the oath of the executor being sufficient. It is then called proof in common form. If, however, there is a contest, or a threatened contest, as to the validity of the will, then the person producing or, as the phrase is, propounding the will, is entitled to prove it by a regular action in which the person propounding the will—the executor usually—and the person or persons contesting it, each produce their witnesses, and cross-examine those produced by the other side. Proof by action is called proof in solemn form per testes. The chief difference between the two forms of proof is this: proof in solemn form finally establishes the validity of the will, while proof in common form has no such effect. For thirty years after the latter the executor may be called upon by anyone interested to prove the will in solemn form.

Wills including under them only freehold land cannot be admitted to proof either in solemn or common form. (In the Goods of Jane Barden, L. R. 1 P. & M. 325.) But wills including under them both freehold land and personalty can be so admitted, and such wills are, by proof in solemn form, established finally both as to the personalty and the freehold land included under them.

In England this difference in the operation of wills of realty and wills of personalty will be abolished as to the wills of persons dying on or after the 1st January, 1898. The law as here stated with regard to wills of personalty will then become applicable to wills of realty. Probate will be granted to wills including under them nothing but real estate (Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 1 (3)), and freeholds will generally rank as far as probate is concerned like chattels real. (Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 2 (2).)

Formerly, the Ecclesiastical Courts had jurisdiction over probate of wills and also over their custody. In 1857, this jurisdiction was taken from them by the Court of Probate Act and vested in the Court of Probate established under that act. (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77; Irish Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79.) By the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 16, the jurisdiction of the Court of Probate is now vested in the High Court of Justice. Under sect. 10 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 95), the County Court has jurisdiction as to probates of wills where the intestate at the time of his decease lived within the district of the County Court in question, and where his estate, exclusive of that held by him as trustee, does not exceed 200*l.* personalty and 300*l.* realty.

A further act has been passed called the Colonial Probates Act, 1892 (55 Vict. c. 6), under which probates granted by any colonial court may, subject to certain conditions, be sealed with the seal of a Court of Probate in the United Kingdom on their production to it, and thereupon are to have the like force and effect and the same operation in the United Kingdom as if granted by that Court.

(b) A will of realty has hitherto, immediately on its coming into operation, vested in the devisees under it the land devised in it to them. These devisees may, if they like, disclaim the land; but until they do so they are regarded by law as the owners of it. In these respects a will is like any other conveyance operating by grant. And be it noted that this rule applies as well to devises in wills referring both to realty and personalty as to devises in wills of pure realty only. Freehold land left by will, immediately on the death of the testator vests in the devisee.

In the case of a will of personalty, however, the first effect of the will is to vest the whole personalty, to whomsoever it may be bequeathed, in the executor. (Co. Litt.

388a.) However specifically an article may be bequeathed to any person, on the death of the testator the ownership of the article vests in the executor, and the legatee has no property in it till the executor has assented to the legacy. And the executor is under no obligation to give his assent until a year after the testator's death. This period—called the executor's year—is allowed by the law to executors to enable them to ascertain and pay off the debts of the testator and generally to administer his estate. (See infra, p. 246.)

So necessary is the office of executor to a will of personalty, that formerly such wills were void if no executor were appointed by them. This, however, is no longer the case. On the other hand, an executor is unnecessary to a will of realty only; indeed, the office, strictly speaking, cannot exist under such a will. An executor, as such, has nothing to do with a testator's realty, and if any of it is actually devised to him—as, for instance, for the purpose of paying the testator's debts—he takes it not as executor but rather as trustee.

In England this difference in the operation of wills of realty and wills of personalty will be abolished as to the wills of persons dying on or after 1st January, 1898. The law as here stated with regard to wills of personalty will then become applicable to wills of realty. Freeholds however devised will, immediately on the death of the testator, vest in the executor (Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 1 (1)), who will be a trustee of them subject to the testator's debts, for the devisee, or if they be not devised by the will, for the testator's heir. (Ibid., sect. 2 (1).) And the executor can transfer them to the devisee or heir by assenting to such transfer (Ibid., sect. 3), just as if they were chattels real or specific legacies.

Execution of Wills.—It has already been pointed out that the formalities necessary to the valid execution of a will varied greatly under the old law according as the will dealt with personalty only, or with realty. This, however, has been altered by the Wills Act, which makes it necessary and sufficient to the validity of every will, that certain formalities should be observed in its execution. These are:—

(a) The will must be reduced into writing before execution. (Sect. 9.) Originally, wills of personalty could be made by word of mouth merely; they were then called nuncupative wills. This rule was practically abolished by the Statute of Frauds, save as regards wills of soldiers when engaged upon an expedition, and wills of sailors at sea. This exception is preserved by the Wills Act. (Sect. 11.) But by subsequent legislation, the wills of petty officers and seamen in the royal navy, and of seamen in the merchant service, as far in both cases as wages, pay, &c., are concerned, are subjected to certain provisions for the prevention of frauds on such person's relatives. (See 28 & 29 Vict. c. 72, and Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 177.)

Though the whole will must be reduced into writing before execution, yet it need not be all written on the same piece of paper, or on pieces of paper physically connected. Other documents proved to be actually existing at the time of execution may be incorporated in the will by a sufficient description of them in the will itself. Thus, a bequest to "the persons named and upon the trusts set out in a deed of trust executed by me on 1st January, 1895, and now deposited at my solicitors'," would, if it were proved that a trust deed answering this description was actually existing, and in the hands of the solicitors at the time the will was executed, make that trust deed a part of the will. (See In the Goods of Garnett, (1894) P. 90.) No subsequent writing, however, adding to or altering the will as executed can affect the will, save it is executed with the forms of a new will. (Sect. 21.) Accordingly, where alterations or interlineations have been made in the will before execution, it is customary on execution to mark them with the initials of the testator and witnesses to prevent any question subsequently arising as to whether they were made before or after execution. (In the Goods of Streatley, (1891) P. 172.)

(b) It must be signed by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, and such signature must be made or acknowledged by him in the presence of two witnesses present at the same time. Such signature is to be at the foot or end of the will (sect. 9, Wills Act), and so placed as to show on the face of the will that the testator intended to give effect by such signature to the will. (15 Vict. c. 24, s. 1.) If the signature is not at the foot or end of the will, the part following it will be invalid. (In the Goods of Anstie, (1893) P. 283.)

(c) The two witnesses must attest the will in the presence of the testator, and in the presence of each other (sect. 9; Wyatt v. Berry, (1893) P. 5); though it is not necessary they should subscribe in each other's presence. (In the Goods of Webb, Deane's Ecc. C. 1.)

Formerly, no witnesses were necessary in the case of a will of personalty when such will was in writing, while at least three witnesses were required to a will of realty. Moreover, such witnesses had to be credible witnesses—that is, not infamous persons, or persons who themselves, or whose husbands or wives, received gifts under the will. Section 14 of the Wills Act now enacts that the incompetency of a witness shall not invalidate a will; and by the following section, where a witness, or the wife or husband of a witness, is a beneficiary under the will, the gift is to be void and the attestation good. This latter provision, however, does not render void a gift to a creditor who is a witness to the will, merely in payment of testator's debt to him; and an executor is a good witness to the execution of a will, and also to its validity or invalidity. (Sect. 17.)

No attestation clause is necessary, but it is usual to add one, as its presence facilitates probate of the will. (See Appendix E.) Where such clause is present, the oath of the executors that they believe the will to be the last true will of the deceased is sufficient proof to obtain probate; but where it is absent, an affidavit as to its execution from one or both of the witnesses, or, if they are dead or not to be found, from someone acquainted with the testator's handwriting, will be required in addition to the oath of the executor. (In the Goods of Stephen Sweet, (1891) P. 400.)

Domicile and Execution.—With regard to wills of land—whether freehold or leasehold—the law has always been that they are to be executed in accordance with the law of the place where the land is—the lex situs, as the phrase is. (Freke v. Carbery, L. R. 16 Eq. 461.) With regard to wills of goods, on the other hand, the law formerly was that they are to be executed in accordance with the law of the place where the testator was permanently resident—his domicile, as it is called—at the time of his decease. Now, frequently, it is extremely difficult to determine where a given person is domiciled, and to prevent the validity of wills depending on the solution of so dubious a question, an act was passed in 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114), enacting that in the case of wills of personalty made out of the United Kingdom by a British subject, whatever may be such person's domicile, his will is to be well executed for the purpose of probate if it is made according to the forms required either by the law of the place where it was made, or by the law of the place where such person was domiciled when it was made, or by the laws then in force in that part of her Majesty's dominions where he had his domicile of origin (sect. 1); and in the case of wills of personalty made within the United Kingdom by a British subject, whatever may be such person's domicile, the will is to be well executed for the purpose of probate if it be executed according to the forms required by the law for the time being in force in that part of the United Kingdom where it is made. (Sect. 2.) And no subsequent change of domicile is to revoke, invalidate, or alter the construction of a will (sect. 3); nor is the act itself to render any will invalid which would have been valid had the act not passed, save in so far as such will may be altered or revoked by a subsequent will made valid by the act. (Sect. 4.) Finally, the act applies only to wills made by persons who die after the passing of the act (6th August, 1861).

By an act passed on the same day (24 & 25 Vict. c. 121), power was given to her Majesty to enter into conventions with foreign countries under which a British subject dying in any such foreign country, or a subject of such foreign country dying in the United Kingdom, is not to be considered to have acquired a domicile in the country where he died, unless he has lived for one year before his decease in that country, and has also deposited in a public office appointed for the purpose a declaration in writing of his intention of becoming domiciled in such country. And for all purposes of testate and intestate succession to moveables, such person till then is to be considered to retain the domicile he possessed at the time of his going to reside there.

No convention under this act has as yet been entered into.

Republication of Will.—Formerly, to give a will of realty validity, it had to be published—that is, some act had to be done by the testator to show that he intended the instrument to operate as a will. Now, no publication beyond the execution required by the statute is necessary to the validity of any will. (Wills Act, s. 13.)

Under the old law, when a codicil was added to a will, the execution and publication of this amounted to a republication of the whole will as well. In this respect the law is still unaltered. (Sect. 22, Wills Act.) The effect of this rule is sometimes to make valid a will improperly executed, and also sometimes to make good a gift under the will which previously was null and void. Thus, if a codicil, duly executed, be added to a will which was invalid through both the witnesses not being present at its execution, or which has been revoked through the subsequent marriage of the testator (see infra), the will is re-established. And again, if, by a will, a gift be made to one of the witnesses, that gift, as we have seen, is void. But if, subsequently, a codicil, duly executed, but attested by different witnesses, be added, then the old execution is superseded, the old witness ceases to be a witness to the will, and the gift to him becomes valid. (Anderson v. Anderson, L. R. 13 Eq. 381.)

An invalid will can be established, and a valid will can be republished by a re-execution in due form. (Sect. 22, Wills Act.) But no will can be re-established or revived by mere implication. (In the Goods of Steele, L. R. 1 P. & M. 575.)

Revocation of Wills.—Under the Wills Act a will can now be revoked in four ways only :—

- (a.) By the subsequent marriage of the testator or testatrix. (Sect. 18.)

Subsequent marriage, however, will not revoke a will made in exercise of a power of appointment, where the property so appointed would not, in default of appointment, pass to the appointer's heir, executor, administrator, or next of kin.

- (b.) By a subsequent will or codicil revoking the will. (Sect. 20.)

- (c.) By a writing executed like a will and declaring an intention to revoke the will. (Sect. 20.)

- (d.) By the destruction of the will with the intention of revoking it. (Sect. 20.)

The destruction of a will without any intention of revoking it will not cause its revocation; oral evidence of its contents will be heard by the Court, and the contents as thus established will be admitted to probate. Neither will the loss of a will cause revocation, nor its intentional destruction under the false impression that it is invalid. (Giles v. Warren, L. R. 2 P. & M. 401.) A will, however, may be partially revoked by the complete obliteration of a part of it, either by erasure, or by blotting, or by pasting paper over such part. (Sect. 21, Wills Act. In the Goods of Gilbert, (1893) P. 183.)

On the other hand, an intention to revoke a will, however clearly manifested, will not cause its revocation unless the will is destroyed or the intention to revoke is declared in writing duly executed like a will. Thus, cancelling a will or cutting off the signature to it, or any other such proceeding, has no effect whatever in revoking the will.

Construction of Wills: General Rule.—It is commonly said that in construing a will the Court will always endeavour to discover the intentions, and will be bound by the intentions, of the testator. This rule is perfectly accurate if we remember that the intentions which the Court seeks are not the actual intentions existing in the mind of the testator when he made his will, but his intentions as expressed in the will. In this respect a will is like any other written instrument. (Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 181.) So, too, the intention which the Court will seek, is not the intention as expressed in a single sentence torn from the context, but the intention as gathered from the instrument as a whole. In this respect, also, wills are construed like other writings. (Abbott v. Middleton, 7 H. L. Cas. 68.)

The difference between the construction of wills and of other writings arises after this general intention has been ascertained. In other writings, and more especially in deeds, the general intention may be modified and even defeated by the parties having chosen to use ordinary or technical language in a sense different from that which it properly possesses. In wills, on the other hand, the general intention will override any ordinary or technical expressions which conflict with it. (Key v. Key, 4 D. M. & G. 73.) It may be noted that wills of realty are, in this respect, construed more strictly than wills of personality. (Miles v. Harford, 12 Ch. D. 691.)

A further difference arises from the fact that while deeds are drawn without punctuation (see supra, p. 206), wills are punctuated. And in construing wills the punctuation will be taken into consideration. In Compton v. Bloxham (2 Col. 201), the decision turned on the fact that the words "my moneys" began an entirely new sentence, the judge (Knight Bruce, V.-C.) having ascertained this by an examination of the will itself.

As has been said, the intentions of the testator must be gathered from the terms of the will. No extrinsic evidence—that is, statements of persons who knew his intentions, or contents of documents not testamentary in their nature—will be admitted to show that the intentions expressed on the face of the will were not his real intentions. Neither will extrinsic evidence be admitted to remedy what are called patent ambiguities—that is, deficiencies of expression appearing on the face of the will itself, such as a blank where the name of a legatee should have appeared. (Re Gregson's Trusts, 2 Hem. & M. 504.) But when a will is itself clear in its terms, difficulties may arise in applying it to the facts. For example, a legacy may be left "to my niece B. C.," and the testator may have had two nieces called B. C. (In re Fish, (1894) 2 Ch. 83.) Or, again, a legatee may be described as "J. Brown of Whiteacre," and on investigation it may turn out that the Brown living at Whiteacre is R. Brown, and that there is a J. Brown living at Blackacre. Such ambiguities as these are called latent ambiguities because they do not appear on the face of the will, but only arise when the time comes for applying the will to the facts. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain them. (Charter v. Charter, L. R. 7 H. L. 364.)

Construction of Wills: Special Rules.—Besides this general rule of construction, which is, to a large extent, the same as is applied in the case of every written instrument, there are certain special rules applicable to wills and to wills alone. Of these, the more important have always been applied to the construction of wills of personalty, and now, by the Wills Act, they have been made applicable to wills of realty also.

(a) Wills are to be construed as speaking from the death of the testator. (Sect. 24, Wills Act.)

By this is meant that the will is to be read as if it had been executed immediately before the testator's death, as far as the property referred to in it is concerned. For example, if the will gives "all my money at Child's Bank" to a certain legatee, that will mean all the testator's money at the bank not at the date of the will, but at the testator's death. In the same way, "all my land in North Hants" will include not merely all the land testator had in that county when he made the will, but also all that he acquired afterwards, and all that he sold subsequently to the will and re-purchased before death (sect. 23)—in short, all that he held at his death.

The rule that the will speaks from the death of the testator applies only to gifts described in general terms. Where the thing given is specifically identified and the extent of it marked out, only that thing so identified and limited will pass under the will. Things may be so identified in either of two ways: (a) by specific description, as "my gold repeater watch"; (b) or by reference to the date of the will, as "the estate I now own at Blackacre." And it does not apply at all to the persons to whom gifts are made in the will. As to them, the rule is that the persons included in a general description, are those who are within that general description, either at a time expressly fixed by the will or, if no such time is fixed, at any time up to the period of distribution. When the period of distribution is depends upon the nature of the gift. If the gift is immediate, then the period of distribution is the testator's death. If the gift is of a remainder, it will be when the remainder comes into possession ; if the gift is postponed as to vesting, it will be when the first member of the class described becomes entitled to his share. Thus, if A., by his will, gives a legacy of ready money to B.'s children without more, the persons included within this description will be B.'s children living at A.'s death : children born to B. subsequently will not participate in the gift. But if A. had first given B. a life interest in the money, and the corpus of it subject thereto to B.'s children, the persons included within this description would be the children of B. not only at A.'s death, but also all born subsequently. And if the gift had been to B.'s children on their attaining, respectively, the age of twenty-one, then all B.'s children born before the eldest attained twenty-one would be included in the gift. (In re Emmet's Estate, 13 Ch. D. 484.)

(b) General residuary devises and bequests carry lapsed devises and bequests. (Sect. 25, Wills Act.)

By a general residuary devise or bequest is meant a devise or bequest giving all that remains of the realty or personalty respectively after satisfaction of the other devises and bequests contained in the will. By lapsed devises and bequests are meant devises or bequests which, for any reason, have failed to go to the person or object for whom or which they were intended. The rule itself, then, means that these devises or bequests go to the persons to whom is left the residue of the realty or personalty respectively.

A devise or bequest lapses when the person to whom it was left dies in the lifetime of the testator, or when the object for which it was left is an illegal object. When the devise is made to two or more persons in joint tenancy, or to a class of persons, then, on the death of one of these before the testator, his share will go to the survivors, and it is only on the death of all the joint tenants, or on the failure of the class before the testator's death, that there will be a lapse. But if the devise or bequest be to two or more persons nominatim as tenants in common, then, on the death of one before the testator, there will be a lapse of his share of the gift. The most common cause of lapse through illegality of object has hitherto been the law as to gifts to charitable uses. Formerly, it was illegal in England, though not in Ireland, to devise land for charitable uses, or to bequeath money for the purpose of purchasing land for charitable uses. This has now been altered, as to England, by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), under which such devises and bequests are good, but land so devised is to be sold within a year from the death of the testator (sects. 5, 6, and 8); and money so bequeathed is not to be invested in the purchase of land. (Sect. 7.) The act applies only to the wills of testators dying after the passing of the act (5th August, 1891). (See infra, p. 332.)

The Wills Act makes two exceptions to the rule that the death of a legatee or devisee in the lifetime of the testator causes a lapse. The first occurs in the case of a devise to a person in fee tail who dies in the lifetime of the testator leaving issue living at the death of the testator capable of inheriting the estate. (Sect. 32.) The second occurs in the case of a devise or bequest of more than a life interest to a child or other issue of the testator who dies in the lifetime of the testator leaving issue living at the testator's death. (Sect. 33.) There is no lapse in either of these cases. The devise or bequest goes as if the original devisee or legatee had died not before, but immediately after, the testator. Accordingly, the issue in the first case takes the estate tail as the heirs of the body of the deceased devisee, that is, by inheritance and not under the will, which, as we shall see, makes a considerable difference in its descent subsequently. (See infra, p. 267.) And in the second case the issue will not take at all if the original devisee or legatee has left a will containing a general residuary clause; in that case the devise or bequest will go to the residuary devisee or legatee under the deceased legatee or devisee's will.

(c.) A devise without words of limitation passes all the interest testator could by his will dispose of. (Sect. 28, Wills Act.)

As we have seen, a grant of freehold land without words of limitation passes to the grantee a life estate merely. This rule of construction gives a similarly expressed gift in a will the largest meaning in accordance with the rule of construction usually applicable to deeds of grant as well as wills—that a grant is to be construed most strongly against the grantor. As to the application of this rule to rentcharges and annuities charged on land, see infra, p. 284.

(d.) The word “lands,” and other like words, are prima facie to include all the testator’s lands of any tenure. (Sect. 26, Wills Act.)

Before the Wills Act such an expression as “lands” carried leaseholds only when the testator had no freeholds to satisfy the gift. Now leaseholds, copyholds, mortgaged estates, lands contracted to be purchased, money held in trust subject to a direction to lay it out in the purchase of lands, &c., are included. (In re Duke of Cleveland’s Settled Estates, (1893) 3 Ch. 244.)

(e.) “Die without issue” refers to a proximate, not an ultimate, failure of issue. (Sect. 29, Wills Act.)

Before the Wills Act, “die without issue” was held to refer to an ultimate failure of issue, i.e., a failure either at the death of the devisee, or at any subsequent time. An estate to continue during the grantee’s life, and as long as he shall have issue, is a fee tail. Accordingly, on such a devise, followed by a gift over, the devisee, immediately after the testator’s death, could defeat the limitation over by barring the fee tail. Since the Wills Act, such an expression is to be construed as referring to a proximate failure of issue, i.e., a failure at the death of the devisee. The effect of this is to turn the gift over into an executory limitation—that is, the devise is a limitation in fee to the devisee, subject to a condition shifting the estate over to another at the devisee's death should he not have issue then living. Here the limitation over cannot be defeated by any act of the first devisee's.

All these special rules of construction only apply when there is nothing in the will to show an intention that they should not apply.

Kinds of Legacies.—Legacies are specific, demonstrative, or general. A legacy is specific when it is of a particular thing; it is demonstrative when it is payable out of a particular fund; it is general when it is neither of a particular thing nor payable out of a particular fund.

Specific legacies are liable to ademption; that is, if the testator sells or otherwise alienates the particular thing bequeathed, or if it be destroyed before his death, the legacy is revoked, or rather avoided, thereby. They may, in cases where the thing given is not specifically identified, but merely generally described, be enlarged by additions to the thing made before the testator's death. Thus, a gift of "all my stock in the Midland Railway" will carry not merely the stock held by the testator at date of will, but also any acquired by him afterwards and held by him at his death. Again, they are not liable to abate on a deficiency of assets to pay all legacies given by the will. Thus, if a testator bequeaths his leasehold house to A., his grey horse to B., and 1,000*l.* apiece to C., D. and E., if after payment of his debts enough money is not left to pay C., D. and E. each 1,000*l.*, these legatees have no claim to a share of the specific legacies to A. and B. Lastly, specific legacies carry with them any income accruing from them from the testator's death.

Demonstrative legacies are not adeemed by the alienation by the testator, during his life, of the fund or stock out of which they are primarily payable, nor can they be enlarged by additions made to that fund by the testator during his life. The alienation of the fund by the testator during his life merely turns them from demonstrative into general legacies. If it remains at his death, they continue demonstrative, and as such are not liable to abate if the fund be sufficient to pay them in full, and they carry income if the fund produces income.

General legacies are simply legacies payable out of what remains of the testator's estate after satisfaction of his debts, specific legacies, and demonstrative legacies. The commonest example of them is the pecuniary legacy—"I bequeath 1,000*l.* to B.," without more. They are not liable to ademption; they cannot be enlarged by additions to the general estate, except they are residuary in their character; they are liable to abate, and, as a general rule, they carry interest only from the end of the executor's year, or from the time fixed in the will for their payment. There are three exceptions to this. Interest is payable from the death of the testator on legacies:—

- (a) In satisfaction of a debt;
- (b) To children for whom they are the sole provision;
- (c) Charged on land.

With regard to the last of these, it is to be noted that legacies are not payable out of land unless they are expressly charged upon it. When a legacy is charged on a specific piece of land, it is itself a specific legacy, and on sale of the land charged before the death of the testator it is adeemed (Newbold v. Roadknight, 1 R. & My. 677), and on the death of the legatee after the testator, but before payment and before the end of the executor's year, it lapses for the benefit of the land on which it was charged.

It is to be noted, further, that there is no division of devises similar to this division of legacies into specific, demonstrative, and general. All devises are in their nature specific—even residuary devises. (Lancefield v. Iggulden, 10 Ch. App. 136.)

Position of Executors.—We have already pointed out that hitherto an executor, qua executor, has nothing to do with the freehold lands devised in the will of which he is executor. That will may vest these lands in him, or it may give him a power of sale over them for the purpose of raising funds to pay the testator's debts or legacies, but such rights as he thus takes he takes as devisee, and not as executor.

To a will of personalty, on the other hand, an executor, or an administrator with the functions of an executor, is absolutely necessary. Accordingly, when through any cause there is no executor, or none able or willing to act, the Court appoints an administrator to act in his stead. Such an administrator is called an administrator cum testamento annexo—i. e., with the will annexed. The person usually appointed in any of these cases is the residuary legatee.

In England, this difference in the executor's position under wills of realty and wills of personalty will be abolished as to the wills of persons dying on or after the 1st January, 1898. By the Land Transfer Act, 1897, the testator's real estate is to be administered by his executors precisely as if it was a chattel real, and all the powers, rights, duties and liabilities of an executor in respect of personal estate shall apply to real estate so far as the same are applicable as if that real estate were a chattel real vesting in them, save that it shall not be lawful for some or one only of several executors without the authority of the Court to sell or transfer real estate. (Sect. 2 (2).)

A limited or special kind of administration with the will annexed is granted when the executor appointed by the will becomes lunatic before accepting or disclaiming the office. The person appointed is either the lunatic's committee—i. e., guardian—or the residuary legatee (see Part VII.); and again, where the sole executor under the will is an infant. The person usually appointed is the infant's guardian, and he acts until the infant comes of age. (See Part VII.) In the latter case the administrator is called administrator durante minore ætate.

An administrator ad colligendum bona defuncti is appointed in any necessary case for the purpose not of administering the estate, but of keeping the goods in safe custody.

In all these cases, save the last, the administrator cum testamento annexo is practically an executor. The chief differences are that he does not derive his authority from the will as an executor does, and therefore he has no right to interfere with the estate till appointed by the Court; whereas the executor's right arises immediately upon the death of the testator; and that his office on his death before the administration is complete does not descend to his executor as an executor's office does.

Duties of Executors.—Stated shortly, the chief duties of an executor are to bury the testator in a manner suitable to his estate, to prove his will, to call in his personal estate, to pay his debts, to assent to the specific legacies, to pay the demonstrative and general legacies, and to hand over the residue of the testator's estate to the residuary legatee, if there be one, or to distribute it among the testator's next of kin if no residuary legatee be appointed by the will, or if the residuary legatee so appointed has predeceased the testator.

The assets of the testator are available for these purposes much in the order in which they are enumerated above. The first charge upon them is for funeral and testamentary expenses of deceased. Then follow expenses properly incurred in calling in the estate. Then, before legacies of any kind are satisfied, all the testator's debts must be paid. These debts are payable in a certain order, Crown debts coming first, and debts due on voluntary bonds last. It is only after all the debts have been paid or provided for that the executors are justified in assenting to the specific legacies or paying the pecuniary bequests.

Rights of Executors.—For the purpose of enabling executors to administer estates quickly and inexpensively, very large powers are now given them. Of these, the most important are as follows:—By the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 37, the executor may (a) pay debts on whatsoever he considers sufficient evidence of their existence; (b) accept a composition for debts due to the estate; (c) allow time for the payment of such debts; (d) compromise or submit to arbitration all debts, accounts, or claims against the estate. By the Law of Property Amendment Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), ss. 27 and 28, he can convey a lease or other property subject to a rent, covenants or agreements, after satisfying all liabilities then accrued, and setting aside a fund to satisfy liabilities which may arise in the future, and thereby free himself from all future liability as to such rent, covenants or agreements. And by the same Act, he can advertise for creditors of his testator to send in their claims within a certain reasonable time, and after that time has elapsed he may distribute the estate amongst those who have sent in their claims and the legatees, without being personally responsible to any creditor who has not sent in his claim. (In re Brachen, Doughty v. Townson, 42 Ch. D. 1.)

Besides these statutory powers, executors have other rights as to the payment of debts of considerable importance. Thus, they are entitled to pay themselves a debt owed to them by the testator out of the legal assets of the testator (see supra, p. 36), before paying the debts of other creditors of equal degree. This is called an executor's right of retainer. Again, among creditors of equal degree, he can prefer one to another. Moreover, he can, if he please, pay debts due by the testator but barred by the Statutes of Limitation, provided an action to recover it had not been defended, and judgment given against the creditors. He is not entitled to carry on the testator's business, unless he is expressly authorized to do so by the will; and if he does carry it on without such authority, he does so at his risk. If, however, he is authorized to carry it on, and if the testator's creditors assent, he is entitled to an indemnity out of the estate for all debts contracted by him in properly carrying on the trade. (Dowse and others v. Gorton and others, (1891) App. Cas. 190.)

As between the beneficiaries and the creditors of the testator, the latter are entitled to have their debts satisfied out of any part of the testator's estate. It is all liable for the testator's debts, and creditors who have obtained judgment for their debts are entitled to seize in execution whatever part of it it is most convenient to them to seize. But as between the beneficiaries themselves the estate is liable in a regular order. That order is as follows:—

- (1.) Personalty not disposed of by the will or disposed of by way of residue.
- (2.) Real estate devised for the payment of debts.
- (3.) Real estate not disposed of.
- (4.) Real estate disposed of, but charged with debts.
- (5.) General legacies.
- (6.) Devises not charged with debt and specific legacies.
- (7.) Realty or personalty appointed by will under a general power.
- (8.) Paraphernalia of widow, i.e., jewels and personal ornaments bequeathed to her.

The beneficiaries whose interests come under any of the later of these heads are entitled, as against the beneficiaries whose interests come under earlier heads, to insist that the parts of the estate included under those earlier heads shall be exhausted in the payment of the testator's debts before their interests under the will are touched. And if a creditor seizes anything coming within a later head, e.g., a specific legacy, the beneficiary who would have been entitled to that thing can claim the value of it from the beneficiaries liable before him, unless their interests have already been entirely swept away. It is to be noted that the Land Transfer Act, 1897, makes no difference in the order of liability between beneficiaries. (Sect. 2 (3).)

BY TRANSFER BY OPERATION OF LAW: INTER VIVOS. 249

SUB-SECTION 2.

TRANSFER BY OPERATION OF LAW.

	PAGE		PAGE
Devolution	249	Part A. Devolution inter vivos .	249
		Part B. Devolution mortis causâ	259

Devolution.—Transfer of ownership by operation of law may for brevity be called devolution. Devolution, then, like alienation (of which, indeed, it is only a species—involuntary alienation), may be divided according as the devolution may take place during the life of the owner whose interest is transferred or can only take place on his death. In the former case, it may be called devolution inter vivos, and in the latter, devolution mortis causâ.

Part A. Devolution inter vivos.

	PAGE		PAGE
Devolution inter vivos	249	(b.) Bankruptcy	250
(a.) Judgment	249	(c.) Long possession	255

Devolution inter vivos.—A devolution of ownership inter vivos may take place in consequence of (a) a judgment being given against the owner; (b) the bankruptcy of the owner; (c) or long possession against the owner.

(a) Judgment.—Actions at law or in equity may be either for the recovery of a particular thing, or for the recovery of a sum of money. Now in neither of these cases can the judgment itself be said, as a rule, to transfer the ownership of anything. In the first instance, all that the judgment does is to determine to which of the parties a certain thing legally belongs. It does not transfer, but ascertain, the ownership. Exceptions to this formerly occurred in the case of recoveries, and may still be considered as occurring in foreclosure actions. In the second instance, the judgment merely creates, or renders enforceable, a debt as between the parties to it. The enforcement or execution of the judgment may, however, in this instance, result in a transfer of ownership. The person against whom judgment has been recovered may hand over money to the other party in satisfaction of it; or his goods and leaseholds may be seized by the sheriff under a writ of fiery facias, or his freeholds may be extended under a writ of elegit. Where goods are seized they must be sold; but where freeholds are seized under a writ of elegit, they are valued and then handed over by the sheriff to the judgment creditor, who acquires thereby a chattel interest in them till his debt is paid.

Bankruptcy.—When a person is unable or unwilling to pay his debts, he may, on the petition of himself or of a creditor of his, be adjudicated bankrupt. The effect of such an adjudication is that all his property, whether realty or personalty, and whether corporeal or incorporeal—save only a right of action for a tort to his person (see infra, p. 299)—becomes vested in the trustee or assignee in bankruptcy. Thus there is an universal succession inter vivos, and accordingly bankruptcy must be ranked like judgment as a mode of acquiring title to things.

At the same time, just as judgment in an action of law is a step towards enforcing payment of a particular debt, so bankruptcy is a step towards enforcing payment of debts generally. As such it does not properly belong to the law of property, but rather to the law of actions. It will be sufficient, then, to give here a very slight sketch of the law on the subject.

The law as to bankruptcy in England and Ireland differs. In England it now depends primarily on the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), and the later acts amending it—more especially the Bankruptcy (Discharge and Closure) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 66), the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 62), and the Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71). These acts, however, do not apply to Ireland. The law there depends primarily on the Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 60), and the Bankruptcy (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 58). The law as enacted by these statutes roughly corresponds to the English law of bankruptcy before the passing of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

For brevity, the different acts will be referred to simply by their date, and when the act is not mentioned, but merely a section is referred to, the section will be of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

In both countries, to give the Court of Bankruptcy jurisdiction, it is necessary that the debtor should be guilty of an act of bankruptcy. In England a debtor commits an act of bankruptcy if he (a) makes an assignment of property in trust for creditors generally; (b) makes a fraudulent conveyance of property; (c) makes a conveyance of property which would be a fraudulent preference if the debtor were adjudged bankrupt (see infra, p. 254); (d) departs from or remains out of England, departs from his dwelling-house, or absents himself in any other way, or keeps house with intent to defeat or delay his creditors; (e) has his goods seized in execution and sold; (f) files a declaration of insolvency, or presents a petition in bankruptcy; (g) is served with a bankruptcy notice requiring him to pay a debt for which judgment has been recovered, within seven days of service thereof; (h) gives notice to his creditors that he is about to suspend payment of his debts. (Sect. 4, Bankruptcy Act, 1883.) To make any of these acts an act of bankruptcy on which a petition can be based, it must have been committed within three months of the petition in question. (Sect. 6.)

In Ireland the law is somewhat different. In the first place, the distinction between trader and non-trader still exists there. Departure from dwelling-house, or otherwise absenting himself, and keeping house with intent to delay or defeat creditors, and seizure and sale of goods, are acts of bankruptcy in Ireland only when the debtor is a trader. In the second place, instead of procedure by bankruptcy notice, there is a proceeding by debtor's summons. The chief difference is that the debt on which a debtor's summons issues need not be a judgment debt. (Sect. 21, Act 1872.) Lastly, the act of bankruptcy may occur any time within six months of the petition.

On the commission of an act of bankruptcy, any creditor of the debtor may petition the Court to adjudicate him bankrupt, subject to two conditions. The debt due to the petitioning creditor must have existed at the time the act of bankruptcy was committed, and it must be for an unsecured sum of at least 50*l.* (sect. 6), or in Ireland 40*l.*

If the bankruptcy petition be not dismissed, the result is that, in England, a receiving order is made against the debtor vesting the management of his affairs in the official receiver. (In Ireland he is at once adjudged bankrupt.) After the receiving order is made, a meeting of the debtor's creditors is called. The debtor submits to it a statement of his affairs, he is subjected to a public examination, and, if he has any proposal to make, it is submitted to his creditors for their approval. If the creditors pass a resolution that the debtor should be declared bankrupt, or if they pass no resolution, or if they do not meet, or if his proposal (if any) be not approved by the creditors and the Court, the debtor is adjudged bankrupt. (Sect. 20.)

On adjudication, the following vest immediately and without conveyance, in England, in the official receiver, or (if one be appointed) in the trustee appointed by the creditors (sect. 54); in Ireland, in the official assignee:—

- (a) All the land, whether freehold or leasehold, and all the goods and chattels belonging to the debtor at the date of the act of bankruptcy:

To this there are two exceptions: (1) Property held by the debtor as trustee; (2) Tools of his trade, together with necessary wearing apparel and bedding for himself, his wife and family, to a value altogether of not more than 20% :

- (b) All debts due to the debtor :
- (c) All remedies for breach of contract and for torts, save torts against the person of the debtor :
- (d) The right to execute a power which the bankrupt could have exercised for his own benefit :
- (e) As long as the bankrupt remains undischarged, all property which may come to him by purchase, devise, bequest, descent, or in any other way :
- (f) All goods not belonging to the bankrupt, but being, at the commencement of the bankruptcy, in the possession, order, and disposition of the bankrupt, in his trade or business, by the consent and permission of the true owner under such circumstances that he is the reputed owner thereof. Things in action, save debts due to the bankrupt, however, do not come within this provision. (Sect. 44, Bankruptcy Act, 1883.)

The trustee, however, if he finds that any property which belonged to the bankrupt is burdened with onerous covenants, or that any contracts made by him are unprofitable, may disclaim them within three months after the first appointment of a trustee ; but the trustee cannot disclaim a lease without the consent of the Court, and he cannot disclaim any property where he has declined or neglected to disclaim it for twenty-eight days after he has been applied to in writing by any person interested in the property requiring him to decide whether he will disclaim or not, and if he does not disclaim a contract within such time after such notice, he will be taken to have adopted it. (Sect. 55.) The effect of such disclaimer is to free the bankrupt's estate from any future liability under the covenants or contracts, and the persons injured by such dis-claimers are creditors of the bankrupt's to extent of such injury.

Not merely does the adjudication divest the bankrupt of all his property and proprietary rights, but it also renders invalid certain dispositions made by him before his bankruptcy. Thus, if he has made a voluntary settlement—that is, a settlement without valuable consideration to support it—within two years of his bankruptcy, it is void ipso facto on his becoming bankrupt, and if he made it more than two but less than ten years before the bankruptcy it will be void, unless he can show he was able to pay his debts at the time he made it without the aid of the property settled. (Sect. 47, Bankruptcy Act, 1883.) The settlement, however, is void only from the date of the bankruptcy. If anyone has acquired bonâ fide and for value an interest in the property included under the settlement before the trustee's title arose, that interest will be good against the trustee. (In re Carter and Kenkerdine's Contract, (1897) 1 Ch. 776.)

Again, if he has made a contract or covenant in consideration of marriage for the future settlement on his wife or children of any money or property in which he had not, at the date of his marriage, any estate or interest, vested or contingent, in possession or remainder, on his becoming bankrupt before the property or money has been actually transferred or paid pursuant to the contract or covenant, the contract or covenant will be void as against his trustee in bankruptcy.

Neither of these provisions applies to a settlement on his wife or children, made by the bankrupt, of money or property which has accrued to him in right of his wife (sect. 47, Bankruptcy Act, 1883); and in Ireland, neither of them applies, except where the bankrupt is a trader. (Sect. 52, Act of 1872.)

Again, if the bankrupt has within three months of his bankruptcy, and when unable to pay his debts as they become due out of his own moneys, transferred any property, made any payment, taken or suffered any judicial proceeding, or incurred any obligation for or in trust for any creditor with the view of giving such creditor a preference over the other creditors, such transfer, payment, judicial proceeding, or obligation is to be fraudulent and void as against the trustee in bankruptcy; provided always, that the rights of persons buying in good faith from such creditor shall not be affected. (Sect. 48, Bankruptcy Act, 1883.)

It is not necessary here to enter into the administration of the bankrupt's estate. Suffice it to say, that it is the duty of the trustee or assignee to realize it as cheaply and as expeditiously as possible, and the bankrupt is bound to give him every assistance in his power so to do. From time to time, as the estate is realized, and subject to certain preferential payments, and to costs of the bankruptcy, instalments of, or dividends upon, their debts are paid to the creditors until the whole estate is thus disposed of. The debtor can apply to the Court for his order of discharge—that is, his relief from the disabilities of bankruptcy. This order the Court may refuse altogether, or may suspend for a time fixed by it, in case the debtor has been guilty of practices specified in the Bankruptcy Act, sect. 28, or it may grant it subject to conditions; as, on condition that the bankrupt consents to judgment being entered against him for the unpaid balance of his debts; or it may grant it immediately and without conditions, upon coming to the conclusion that the bankruptcy was due to misfortune, without any misconduct on his part. (Sect. 32.)

Long Possession.—A person in possession of a thing of which he is not the owner is entitled to retain possession of it against every one except the true owner. (Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Strange, 504; 1 Sm. L. C.) This rule applies whether the thing in question is land or goods. When, however, it is land, a further rule applies. In that case, if the person in possession retains possession for a certain period without acknowledging the owner's title, his possession will draw to it the ownership; in other words, the title of the true owner will be transferred by lapse of time to the person in possession of the land. Title thus acquired is called title by long possession. (Marshall v. Taylor, (1895) 1 Ch. 641.)

As just stated, this rule applies only to the ownership of, or rights over, land. Strictly speaking, there is no such thing as title by long possession to goods. Mere length of possession, without acknowledgment of the true owner's title, does not transfer the ownership of goods from the true owner to the person in possession of them. Under the Limitation Act¹ (21 Jac. I. c. 16, s. 3), however, much the same result is produced by a provision which bars actions for the recovery of goods—actions of trover and detinue, as they were formerly called—after the lapse of six years. In order that this enactment may operate, the possession of the goods must be adverse, that is, the possessor must hold them with the intention of retaining them against the true owner. (Philpott v. Kelly, 5 A. & E. 103.) And even then the property in the goods is not changed by the statute, but the remedy for their wrongful detention only is barred, and if the true owner obtains possession of them without action, the person who had them in his possession over six years has no right to recover them from him. (Miller v. Dell, (1891) 1 Q. B. 468.)

In form, long possession of land is in English law treated as if it were not a mode of acquiring ownership, but merely, as in the case of goods, a limitation of actions for its recovery. Thus, the Acts dealing with it are always described as the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 and 1874 (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and 37 & 38

¹ This statute never applied to Ireland. Similar provisions were, however, contained in 10 Car. I. sess. 2, c. 6 (Ir.), which have now been repealed and re-enacted by sects. 20—23 of the Irish Common Law Procedure Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 113).

Vict. c. 57), and their provisions take the shape of prohibitions of actions for the recovery of land after the lapse of a certain period from the date on which the right to bring them first accrued. Yet, nevertheless, these prohibitions have the effect of extinguishing the original owner's title, and of creating a new one by usucapion or prescription in the person in possession. (Sect. 34.) The term prescription is used technically in English law merely as describing the title under which easements and profits à prendre may be acquired by long enjoyment. (See infra, p. 278.)

The law as to limitation of actions as to real property is now contained in 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, the latter of which Acts is an amendment of the former, and is to be read with it. Sect. 1 of the latter Act lays down the general rule that no person shall make an entry or distress, or bring an action or suit to recover any land or rent, but within twelve years after the right to make such entry or distress, or bring such action or suit, first accrued. Rent here means rentcharge, not arrears of rent due under a lease. (Grant v. Ellis, 9 M. & W. 113.) An acknowledgment in writing, however, given by the person in possession of the land to the true owner will prevent the operation of the statute, and the receipt of rent payable by a tenant from year to year, or other lessee, will be sufficient to prevent the statute operating on his behalf. (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 14.)

Sect. 2 of the Act of 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57) deals with interests in expectancy. The right to make an entry or distress with regard to them is to be deemed to arise on their becoming interests in possession by the determination of the particular estate. Where the owner of the particular estate was out of possession, then the owner of the estate in expectancy has only six years from the time when his own interest came into possession, or twelve years from the particular estate becoming an interest in possession, whichever may be longer, to bring action.

The operation of the statutes, moreover, may be delayed or prevented by the disability of the person claiming. Disabilities within the statute are infancy, coverture, idiocy, lunacy, or unsoundness of mind. (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 3.) Formerly, absence beyond the seas also ranked as a disability, but this is now altered. (Sect. 4.) Where disability exists, a further period of six years from the removal of the disability, or from the death of the person entitled, is allowed, provided the whole period does not exceed thirty years. (Sect. 3.) Two further points are to be noted with regard to disability. Where a person under disability dies, no additional time will be allowed on account of the disability of any other person. (Sect. 18, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.) And if the person entitled was not under disability at the time the right accrued, no subsequent disability will affect the operation of the statute.

Another fact that may prevent or delay the operation of the statute is the existence of concealed fraud. Where the person in possession has obtained possession by secret fraud, then the twelve years will be counted, not from the time when an action might have been brought by the person rightfully entitled had he known of the fraud, but from the time he discovered the fraud, or might, with reasonable care have discovered it. (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 26.)

Lastly, the ordinary Statutes of Limitation, though they apply to equitable interests in land (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, s. 24), do not apply to interests, whether in land or goods, secured by an express trust. But mortgages made by way of trust for sale, are mortgages within sect. 7 of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, and by sect. 10 of the same Act, in the case of money or a legacy charged upon land, and secured by means of an express trust, the remedy as against the land is barred just as if no trust existed. And although a trustee cannot prescribe for land or goods held by him as trustee, still actions for innocent breaches of trust are now subject to limitation like actions for debt, as we have already seen. (See supra, p. 97.)

As has been said, the right to recover debts is barred under much the same circumstances as title by long possession is acquired. It will not be necessary, therefore, to repeat what we have here said when referring to what is, strictly speaking, not acquisition of title, but merely limitation of action. To save recurrence to the topic, we have put in Appendix F. a short table giving the periods of limitation for claims to debts, legacies, rents, rentcharges, and such like, besides the periods of limitation as against the Crown and in other special cases, and also for the acquisition of easements.

Part B.—Devolution mortis causa.

	PAGE		PAGE
Devolution mortis causa	259	(b.) Marriage	262
(a.) Escheat and Forfeiture. 259		(c.) Intestate Succession ..	265

Devolution mortis causa.—Devolution mortis causa arises where the ownership of a thing is transferred by operation of law to a new owner in consequence of the death of its previous owner. Between individuals, the new owner's title to the thing in question may arise from the relation of lord and tenant, or of husband and wife, or of common ancestry having subsisted between him and the previous owner. In the absence of such relationships, the Crown may be entitled to the goods, and sometimes in defeasance of them it may be entitled to both the land and goods, of the deceased. It will not, however, be necessary or expedient to treat of devolution to the Crown separately from devolution to a new private owner.

(a) Escheat and Forfeiture.—Escheat, as we have seen, is an incident of fee simple ownership of land. When a tenant in fee simple is attainted, or dies intestate and without heirs, his fee simple lands escheat or revert to the lord of whom he held them.

Strictly speaking, escheat is not always a title arising mortis causâ, since attainder, which causes it, may take place during the tenant's natural life, though upon attainder he became civilly dead. Practically, however, attainder as a cause of escheat has ceased to exist. Formerly, judgment of death by a Court of Common Law whether followed by execution or not, abjuration of the realm, or outlawry, caused attainder. Of these three causes, the last is the only one (if any) which is now effective, abjuration of the realm being long obsolete, and judgment of death no longer operating as a cause of attainder. (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23.)

The usual cause of escheat now is the death of the tenant intestate and without heirs. Failure of heirs most commonly arises through the tenant being a bastard, and, as such, incapable of having any heirs save heirs of his body. (See supra, p. 27.) Formerly, attainder also led occasionally to a failure of heirs, as it caused what was called corruption of blood, i. e., heirship could not be traced through a person who had been attainted. Corruption of blood, however, has been abolished by the statute abolishing attainder on judgment of death.

Escheat, as has been said, is an incident of tenure. Accordingly, when in default of any mesne lord the Crown takes escheated fee simple lands, it takes them as lord paramount. Forfeiture, on the other hand, has nothing to do with tenure. The Crown there confiscates the tenant's land as part of the penalty payable for a crime committed by him.

Forfeiture followed attainder, but, unlike escheat, it applied not merely to the felon's land, but also to his goods and chattels. If the attainder resulted from a conviction of high treason, the mesne lord's right to escheat was defeated, and all the traitor's fee simple lands, and to a certain extent his fee tail estates (see 26 Hen. VIII. c. 13, s. 5), and all his goods and chattels, were forfeited to the Crown. If the attainder resulted from a conviction of felony merely, the felon's goods and chattels were forfeited to the Crown; but his fee simple lands escheated to his lord subject—if he held under a mesne lord—to the right of the Crown to the use and profits of the land for a year and a day. The abolition of attainder, save in case of outlawry, was accompanied by the abolition of the forfeiture which resulted from it.¹ (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23.)

Formerly, aliens were not permitted to hold freehold interests in land, or chattel interests of more than a certain duration. (32 Hen. VIII. c. 16, s. 23; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66.) If an alien violated this rule by taking a greater interest than the law allowed, the interest so taken, on death of the alien, or after investigation and office found, whichever first happened, became forfeited to the Crown. This has now been altered, and an alien can hold any interest in English land.

Escheat was an incident of every legal estate in fee simple, but it did not apply to equitable estates, as they were not the subject of tenure. As a result, the legal estate of a trustee, on his death without heirs or on his attainder, escheated to the lord or Crown; but on the death without heirs, or on the attainder of a tenant in fee simple of an equitable estate, his interest did not escheat—the trustee or owner of legal estate as terre tenant held the land discharged of the trust. The escheat of a trustee's estate was abolished by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23 (and see now sect. 30, Conveyancing Act, 1881); and by the Intestates' Estates

¹ Forfeiture of both land and goods sometimes resulted from convictions for other offences than treason and felony. (See 2 Bl. Com. 267, 419.) These forfeitures, however, were sanctioned by particular statutes, not by the general law. This difference between forfeiture of lands and goods may be noticed. The forfeiture of lands related back, after conviction, to date when crime was committed; forfeiture of goods applied only from time of conviction.

Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, equitable interests are rendered liable to escheat on the death of their owner intestate and without heirs. The escheat appears to be to the Crown. (In re Wood, Attorney-General v. Anderson, (1896) 2 Ch. 596.)

(b) Marriage.—Before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, marriage ranked among the causes of a devolution of ownership inter vivos as well as mortis causâ. Then when a woman owning property married, the husband immediately became entitled, unless his common law rights were avoided by a settlement, to very large interests in her realty and personalty. He was entitled to the rents and profits of her freeholds during the coverture, and if such freeholds were heritable, and he had issue born alive by her who could inherit them, he was, in case she predeceased him, entitled to a life estate in all of them of which she was seised in possession at her death. This life estate was called an estate by the curtesy of England. As to her leaseholds, he was entitled to them absolutely during the coverture. He could alienate them without her consent—a power which he did not possess over her freeholds; the latter could only be alienated by her consent, which had to be acknowledged by her separately. Moreover, if he outlived her, he was entitled to her leaseholds absolutely. If, however, she outlived him, and he during the coverture did not alienate them, they on his decease survived to her independently of his will and debts. Her goods and chattels—choses in possession—vested absolutely and for all purposes in him immediately on the marriage. Choses in action (see infra, p. 294), on the other hand, were like leaseholds; they vested in the husband during the coverture, and if allowed to remain choses in action till the death of the husband or wife, they then survived to the survivor. If the husband, however, reduced them into possession during the coverture, they then, being choses in possession, vested in him absolutely.

These common law rights of a husband were, as has been said, often avoided by means of a settlement to the wife's separate use. The effect of such a settlement was to deprive the husband of all rights over the wife's property during her life. Moreover, on her predeceasing him, if she left a will, the property went under it precisely as if she had been unmarried. If, however, she died intestate, the husband's common law rights revived. He was entitled to an estate by the curtesy in her freeholds, to her leaseholds and goods absolutely, without taking out letters of administration of her estate, and to her choses in action on taking out such letters.

The effect of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), has practically been to make all the property of women married since 31st December, 1882, and all the property accruing since that date to women married before it, the wife's separate estate without the necessity of a settlement. (Sect. 1.) During the wife's life the husband has no right to any share of or interest in this statutory separate estate. She can deal with it as she pleases without his consent, and if she lends it to him, she is entitled to recover it back. If he predeceases her, it remains her property; if she predeceases him, it will go under her will should she leave one, but should she leave no will, his common law rights revive. He is then entitled to her goods and chattels real absolutely, without taking out administration (Stanton v. Lambert, 39 Ch. D. 626), to her choses in action on taking out administration, and to an estate by the curtesy on her heritable freeholds, provided he had issue born alive by her who might have inherited them.

Marriage never entitled a wife to any interest in her husband's lands or goods during the coverture. Unless, however, where she had, before marriage, given up the right in consideration of a jointure settled upon her (27 Hen. VIII. c. 10), she was entitled, in case he predeceased her, to dower out of all the heritable lands the legal interests in which had at any time during the coverture been vested in her husband in severalty, and to which any issue she might have had might possibly have been heir. Her right to dower accordingly became a burden upon the land, which remained upon it even though her husband had sold the lands before his death, or even though he devised them to someone else. By the Dower Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105), the law has been altered as to women married since 1st January, 1834. A widow's right to dower is now defeated by the alienation of the husband's lands during his life or by his will (sect. 4), and it is subject to all partial alienations, and all charges created by him by any disposition or will, and also to all debts, incumbrances, and contracts affecting his lands. (Sect. 5.) And further, the widow's right may be defeated by a declaration against dower made by the husband by deed or by will. (Sects. 6, 7, and 8.)

Where the right is not defeated by any of these means, a widow is still entitled to a life estate in one third of the heritable lands which her husband dies seized of or entitled to (sect. 3, Dower Act), whether his interest in them is legal or merely equitable. (Sect. 2.) If the lands be subject to the custom of gavelkind, her right is to a life estate in a moiety of them, but it continues only so long as she remains unmarried and chaste.

As to his goods and chattels real on the death of a husband intestate, these vest in the President of the Probate Division of the High Court. The Court appoints someone—usually the widow—to administer them. (See infra, p. 265.) When the deceased's estate has been realized and his debts paid—the widow is entitled, under the Statutes of Distribution (22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10; and 1 Jac. II. c. 17, s. 7), to one-third of the residue absolutely if the husband has left issue living at his decease, or to one-half absolutely if he has left no such issue.

Under the Intestates' Estates Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 29), the widow of a person dying childless and intestate since 1st September, 1890, is entitled to a first charge of 500*l.* upon his estate, payable rateably out of his net realty and personalty. This charge is over and above any share she may be entitled to out of the residue of the estate, which residue is to be treated, as far as her claims are concerned, as if it were the whole net estate.

(c) Intestate Succession.—We have already pointed out the great difference which has hitherto characterized the operation of a will of lands and of a will of goods. Much the same distinction appears in the devolution of land and goods under an intestacy. Hitherto on the death intestate of a tenant in fee simple or in fee tail, his lands have vested immediately in his common law or customary heir, or his heir of the body, according to their tenure and his estate. The heir became at once the owner of them without the intervention of the Courts or the State. Indeed, they were vested in him more completely than they could be by an ordinary conveyance, since a grantee can disclaim or refuse a gift by deed or will; but an heir could not disclaim a freehold coming to him by descent. On the other hand, on the death intestate of an owner of chattels real or personal, these vest, not in his next of kin, but in the President of the Probate Division. (21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 19.) The Court hands them over to an administrator whom it appoints by the grant to him of letters of administration. The administrator then occupies much the same position as an executor under a will. He realises the assets of the deceased, pays his debts, and then divides the surplus among his next of kin according to the Statutes of Distribution. He has the same powers of settling claims, and the same time—one year—for administering the estate, as an executor.

In England, this difference in the devolution of realty and personalty on the death of their owner will, as far as devolution to the administrators is concerned, be abolished as to the estates of persons dying on or after the 1st

January, 1898. Realty will then devolve on the administrators, who will have the same rights over its administration as if it were not pure realty, but a chattel real. The subsequent devolution of realty will, however, remain unaltered, the administrators being merely trustees for the persons who are heirs to it by the common law or custom affecting it. These are entitled to demand its transfer to them at any time after the expiration of a year from the intestate's death. (Land Transfer Act, 1897, ss. 1, 2, and 3.)

These differences may be noticed between the office of executor and that of administrator. The right of an executor arises under the will, and therefore it dates from the death of the testator. The right of an administrator arises under the grant of the Court, and therefore it dates, not from the death of the intestate, but from the grant. On the death of an executor, his office survives to his executor if he have one, but not to his administrator if he dies intestate. On the death of an administrator, his office becomes vacant until a new grant is made to some other person. The new administrator is called administrator de bonis non, i.e., of the goods not administered by the first administrator.

The common law rules governing the descent of heritable freeholds were reduced to certain canons by Lord Hale. They have, since then, been modified by the Inheritance Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106; amended by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, ss. 19 and 20), which applies to the estates of persons dying on or after 1st January, 1834. The distribution of the surplus of an intestate's personal estate after payment of his debts is regulated by the Statutes of Distribution (22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10, and 1 Jac. II. c. 17, s. 6), as modified, as regards the widow's share, by the Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, already referred to. We will endeavour to make clear the difference between the two systems of succession by stating the chief canons of descent, and contrasting them with the analogous rules applying to personalty.

Before doing so, however, it may be well to point out that the right to inherit freeholds and the right to claim a share of an intestate's personalty depend equally on kinship. In both cases, generally speaking, the rule is that the nearest in blood shall succeed; but in both cases (and more particularly in inheritance) this rule is modified by the special rules now to be stated. Degrees in kinship are counted, as between lineal ancestor and descendant, by the number of generations between them, and as between collateral relatives by the number of generations from one relative up to the common ancestor and down to the other relative. Thus, for example, father and son are in the first degree of kinship, grandfather and grandson in the second, and so on. On the other hand, brothers also are in the second degree—from one brother to the father being one degree, and from father to the other brother a second; while uncle and nephew are in the third,—first, uncle to his father; second, father to uncle's brother; third, uncle's brother to nephew.

We have already dealt with the widow's and widower's rights in case of intestacy. We will therefore confine ourselves now to the rights arising from kinship—that is, blood relationship.

(a) Heritable Freeholds: Descent is traced from the last purchaser.

Personalty: The intestate is always the stock of succession.

This rule as to heritable freeholds was introduced by the Inheritance Act. The old rule was that descent was to be traced from the last owner seised in possession.

By "purchaser" is meant an owner who acquires in any other way than by descent from some other owner or by escheat, enclosure, or partition. Thus, A. buys Blackacre and Whiteacre. He devises the former to B., who is also his heir-at-law, but he dies intestate as to the latter, to which, however B., as his heir-at-law, succeeds by descent. On B.'s death intestate, Blackacre, of which, as devisee, he was purchaser (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, s. 3; Strickland v. Strickland, 10 Sim. 374), will descend to his heir-at-law, while Whiteacre, which came to him by descent, will descend not to his heir, but to the heir of A., who may, of course, be a different person.

A limitation is placed on this rule by the Law of Property Amendment Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, ss. 19 & 20). Where there is a failure of the heirs of the last purchaser, then descent may be traced from the person last entitled to the land. Thus, if A. dies intestate, leaving freeholds descended to him from his father, and his father had left no blood relations save A., then, in order to prevent escheat, the freeholds would descend to A.'s heirs, if he had any—that is, his relatives by his mother's side.

(b) Heritable freeholds: The inheritance descends in the first place to the issue of the last purchaser in infinitum.

Personalty: The succession falls in the first place among the issue of the intestate in infinitum.

It should be repeated here that these rules apply, subject to the widow's or widower's rights which we have already stated (supra, p. 262). Thus, in the case of freeholds, if the intestate left a widow or widower, the issue would take subject to the widow's right to dower, or the widower's right to an estate by the curtesy; and in the case of personalty, the widow would be entitled to her third and the widower to the whole estate, to the total exclusion of the issue. Subject to this, in both heritable freeholds and personalty it is only in default of issue of the stock of descent or succession that lineal ancestors or collateral relatives have any claim.

(c) Heritable freeholds: In default of the issue of the last purchaser the inheritance descends to his nearest lineal ancestor.

Personalty: In default of the issue of the intestate the succession falls in the first place to his father.

The rule here applicable to heritable freeholds is a new one introduced by the Inheritance Act (3 & 4 Will. IV.

c. 106, s. 6). The old rule was that freeholds could not lineally ascend, and, therefore, they frequently went to a collateral relative in preference to a lineal ancestor nearer in kin to the propositus.

The new rule means that a lineal ancestor will now take in preference to any collateral relative who, under the old rule, could only have taken by tracing his descent through the ancestor, or in default of descendants of the ancestor. Thus the father is preferred to the brother, the grandfather to the uncle, but not to the brother since the brother can take by tracing his descent through a nearer lineal ancestor, i. e., the father.

In the case of personalty the entire succession goes only the length of the father. Should he be dead, then the mother and brothers and sisters become entitled in equal shares.

(d) Heritable freeholds: The male relatives of the last purchaser are preferred to his female relatives of the same degree.

Personalty: No preference to male relatives over female relatives is shown except as regards the intestate's parents.

The rule of inheritance which gives preference to the male over the female applies not merely to the issue of the propositus, but also to his lineal ancestors and collateral relatives. Thus, a son succeeds before an elder daughter; the son of a son before the son of a daughter; the father and all his relatives succeed before the mother or any of her relatives; the father's or mother's paternal relatives before the father's or mother's maternal relatives, &c.

No such preference is shown to the male over the female as regards claims to an intestate's personalty save as regards the intestate's mother. If the intestate has left no issue, as has been just pointed out, the father is entitled to his whole personalty; if the father be dead the mother, who is the only relative in the first degree, ranks only with the brothers and sisters of the intestate who are in the second degree of kinship to him.

(e) Heritable freeholds: As between male relatives of the same degree only the eldest inherits; while all female relatives of the same degree inherit equally.

Personalty: All relatives of the same degree succeed equally independently of age or sex, subject to their bringing into hotchpot any advancement they may have received from the intestate before his death. (22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10, s. 5.)

The custom of primogeniture as the preference of the eldest in the matter of inheritance is usually called, probably arose out of the feudal system. A characteristic of that system was the identification of the ownership of land with political and military power. This cannot easily be divided among a number of persons, and accordingly the land to which it was annexed was not divided either as a rule. When, however, the descent was to women who in theory and law were incapable of exercising political or military power, the reason for preventing the division of the land disappeared, and they succeeded equally as coparceners.

Before the introduction of the feudal system, the descent appears to have gone to the males equally, as is now the case in gavelkind lands. (Glan. l. 7, c. 3.) Indeed, descent to the eldest son was at first, even after the Conquest, confined to lands in knight service. (2 Bl. Com. 215.) The course of descent in gavelkind lands is, to all the sons equally, in default of sons to all the daughters equally, in default of daughters to all the brothers equally. If a son or daughter is dead leaving issue the issue take their parent's share. (Rob. Gav. 112, 115.)

The doctrine of hotchpot is now confined to the succession to personalty. Originally, however, it applied also to realty. If land was given by an ancestor to a woman in frankmarriage, and afterwards land descended from the same ancestor to her in coparcenary with her sisters, before she could claim a share of the inheritance she had to bring into the division the lands in frankmarriage. (2 Bl. Com.

191.) At present in distributing the personalty of an intestate land coming to one of the claimants as heir cannot be taken into consideration. (Boyd v. Boyd, L. R. 4 Eq. 305.) Nothing need be brought into the estate of the intestate by the claimants to a share of it, but personalty given by the intestate for their advancement or establishment in life—not merely their support or education. (Taylor v. Taylor, L. R. 20 Eq. 155.)

(f) Heritable freeholds: Representation by issue is unlimited.

Personalty: Representation by issue is unlimited only as regards the descendants of the intestate, not being admitted at all in the case of his collateral relatives, save only as respects the representation of his deceased brothers and sisters by their children where one or more brothers or sisters are surviving.

“Representation by issue” means that the issue of a deceased person who, were he alive, would be entitled under the intestacy, are permitted to stand in his shoes for the purpose of succession. Thus, if A. dies intestate, leaving B. and C., two daughters, and D., the child of a deceased son, D. will represent his or her dead father, and be entitled to succeed to A.’s realty in preference to B. and C., A.’s daughters. The same would have been the case if B. and C. had been aunts of A.’s, and D. had been the child of a deceased uncle. As to personalty, this principle is recognized fully in the case of descendants of the intestate. Thus, in the case given, A.’s personalty would be divided between B., C., and D., the last mentioned taking his father’s share by representation. And the same would be the case if B. and C. had been sisters of the intestate, and D. the son of a deceased brother. But had B. and C. been aunts, and D. the son of a deceased uncle or aunt, B. and C. would have taken everything, and D. nothing. After the children of brothers and sisters of the intestate no representation is permitted among collaterals. All relatives of the nearest degree to the intestate take the whole net personalty among them to the exclusion of all other relatives of a more remote degree.

Relatives taking directly take per capita, that is, the estate is divided among them by the head, while relatives taking by representation take per stirpes, that is, the parent's share is divided among those who represent him. Thus, if A. dies intestate leaving five children as next of kin, these children take equally per capita. If, however, one child had predeceased him, leaving five children, the four children of A. would each have taken a fifth part of A.'s personalty, while the five grandchildren would have taken the remaining fifth part—their parent's share—between them.

Representation does not arise among collaterals where all entitled are of the same degree, and, accordingly, in such case each takes per capita. Thus, if A. dies intestate leaving no brother living, but five nephews by one deceased brother, and one nephew by another, the six nephews will each take one sixth part of his personalty. (Lloyd v. Tench, 2 Ves. sen. 215.)

But this rule does not apply to descendants. If in the last case the nephews had been grandchildren of A., the estate would have been divided into moieties, one going to the five brothers, and the other to the only child. (In re Natt, Walker v. Gammage, 37 Ch. D. 517.)

(g) Heritable freeholds: Relatives of the half-blood inherit after relatives of the whole blood, where the common ancestor is a male, and after the common ancestor where the common ancestor is a female.

Personalty: No distinction subsists between the half and the whole blood as to their right to succeed.

The right of the half-blood to inherit was given by sect. 9 of the Inheritance Act. Before that they were totally excluded. This exclusion, like the preference of the male relatives over the female, probably originated in the ancient custom of regarding as the only legitimate relationship that through males—agnatic relationship. (Maine's Ancient Law, pp. 150—152.)

Another rule of descent applies to heritable freeholds which can have no analogy applicable to succession to personalty. This is as follows:—

In inheritance by female paternal ancestors, the mother of the more remote male paternal ancestor and her heirs shall be preferred to the mother of a less remote paternal ancestor and her heirs; and in inheritance by the female maternal ancestors, the mother of the more remote male maternal ancestor and her heirs, shall be preferred to the mother of a less remote male ancestor and her heirs. (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, s. 8.)

This rule is not of frequent application. It means, for example, that if A. dies intestate, leaving no relatives of his father's blood except his father's mother and his father's father's mother, the latter will succeed to A.'s freeholds in preference to the former. In the same way, if A. had had no relatives of his father's blood, and none of his mother's blood except her father's mother and her father's father's mother, the latter would succeed in preference to the former.

The rights of the Crown under an intestacy can only arise when the intestate has left no heirs or next of kin. In that case it is entitled to his heritable freeholds as lord paramount in case there is no mesne lord. (Such is now mostly the case, and it is always presumed to be the case until the contrary is shown.) And the Crown is entitled to his personalty, both legal and equitable, absolutely as bona vacantia. It is, however, to be borne in mind that the Crown takes subject always to the rights of the intestate's widow or widower, should the intestate have left a widow or widower.

PART V.

RIGHTS OVER THINGS OWNED BY OTHERS.

	PAGE
Corporeal and Incorporeal Property	274
SECTION I.—RIGHTS OVER LAND OWNED BY OTHERS	275
SECTION II.—RIGHTS OVER GOODS OWNED BY OTHERS	288

Corporeal and Incorporeal Property.—We have now dealt with the law of property strictly so called, that is, ownership over existing physical objects ; but there still remain those proprietary rights which, though not ownership in its fullest or strictest sense, are nevertheless commonly regarded as property. These rights are of two kinds. The first class consists of true proprietary rights vested in one person over physical objects owned by another person, or, in other words, some of the ordinary rights which together constitute the ownership of a thing, detached from the bulk of those rights and vested in a different person from him who is entitled to the bulk of them. (See supra, p. 12.) The second class consists of those quasi-proprietary rights which, since they do not subsist over physical objects, are not, strictly speaking, proprietary at all.

These two classes of rights are now commonly called purely incorporeal things. This name, as we have already pointed out, arises from a confusion between rights and the objects over which rights subsist, namely, physical objects or things. The reason, however, why they are so called is clear. They are called incorporeal because they do not give a right to the possession and control of a physical object. And they are called purely incorporeal, to distinguish them from interests in expectancy in freehold land which were in old times usually classed as incorporeal property, because, like purely incorporeal property, they lay in grant and not in livery. (See supra, p. 202.)

We will now deal shortly with the first class—rights over things owned by others.

SECTION I.

RIGHTS OVER LAND OWNED BY OTHERS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Mode of Owning.....	275	B. Rights to take part of
		Land's Profits	280
A. Rights to use Land in		C. Rights to appoint to Office
Definite Ways.....	276	connected with Land..	285

Mode of Owning.—When rights over land owned by others are annexed to the ownership of other land, they are said to be appendant or appurtenant to such land. When they are owned separately from the ownership of any land, they are said to be in gross. A right of this kind is appendant when it was naturally and originally annexed to the ownership of the land; it is appurtenant when it has become annexed to it through express grant or prescription. Rights appendant or appurtenant pass under a grant of the land to which they are annexed without special mention; but it sometimes happens that such rights, though enjoyed with a plot of land, are not, strictly speaking, either appendant or appurtenant to it, and in such cases they do not, at common law, pass with the grant of it, unless specially described. Accordingly it used to be customary to insert in deeds of grant general words, as they were called, to carry any easements annexed to the land. Now, by sect. 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), such general words are to be implied, save where a contrary intention is expressed, in all conveyances executed after 1881.

Rights in land owned by others, when enjoyed in gross, are tenements within the statute De Donis, and therefore entailable. (See supra, p. 37.)

A. Rights to use Land in Definite Ways.—Rights to use in definite ways land belonging to another person than the person entitled to the rights are called, in legal language, easements. Easements are not regarded in English law as property in themselves. Owing to the fact that they never exist in gross, that is, separately, but are always annexed to the ownership of some plot of land other than that over which they subsist, they are regarded rather as extensions of the ordinary rights of ownership in the plot of land to which they are annexed.¹ This plot is called the dominant tenement; the plot over which they subsist the servient tenement.

Easements should be distinguished from those common law rights which are sometimes called natural easements, such as the right which the owner of one plot of land enjoys to have his soil supported by the soil of the neighbouring plot, the right which the owner of the surface of land enjoys to have it supported by the minerals or other strata underlying it when these belong to another person, or the right which one riparian owner enjoys to the continuance, undiminished and uncontaminated, of the natural flow of a river or stream passing over or by his land.

¹ It is perhaps worth noting that Blackstone puts rights of way among incorporeal hereditaments, though such rights can scarcely be said ever to exist in gross. (2 Bl. Com. 35. But see Rymer v. McIlroy, (1897) 1 Ch. 538.)

(John Young & Co. v. Bankier Distillery Co., (1893) A. C. 691; Mayor of Bradford v. Pickles, (1895) A. C. 129.) These are mere incidents of ownership. If in any case they do not accompany ownership, they must have been parted with by express grant, or have been lost by negligence or acquiescence in their violation. Easements, on the other hand, are always additions to the ordinary rights of ownership which have to be acquired just as ordinary rights are lost—by grant, express or implied, or prescription. (Backhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. Cases, 503.)

The most important easements are rights of support for buildings, rights of way, and rights to water, light, or air. By a right of support for buildings is meant a right to have buildings on the dominant tenement supported by the soil, or the buildings on the soil, of the servient tenement, or where the surface and subjacent strata belong to different owners, to have the buildings on the surface supported by the subjacent strata. By a right of way is meant a right belonging to the owner of the dominant tenement to walk, ride, drive, or bring cattle—as the case may be—over the servient tenement. By a right to water is meant either a right to have an artificial flow of water from the servient tenement continued, or a right to discharge over the servient tenement water which has been artificially accumulated on the dominant tenement. By rights to light and rights to air are meant rights to the free passage of light or air over the servient tenement to windows or apertures in buildings on the dominant tenement.

None of these rights necessarily attaches to the ownership of a plot of land at common law. They must be specially acquired, and they may be acquired in any of three ways: (a) by express grant; (b) by implied grant; (c) under the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71).

Of express grant it is unnecessary to say anything, save that it must be by deed. Implied grant may arise either (a) through the circumstances attending the grant of the dominant tenement, or (b) through long enjoyment of the easement by the owner of the dominant tenement. As to the former of these, it is a rule that a grantor shall not be allowed to derogate from his own grant. Accordingly, when the owner of land grants part of it, he will not be allowed to use the remainder in such a way as to interfere with the enjoyment of the part granted. Thus if the part granted can only be entered upon over the part retained by the grantor, the grantee will have a right of way over the part retained. This is called a way of necessity. Again, if the part granted discharges artificially water over the part retained, or receives an artificial supply of water from it, or if the buildings on the part granted receive light or air from over the part retained, all these rights will go with the grant of the part granted without special mention—that is, the grant of them will be implied. The easements that at common law go with such a grant are called continuous and apparent easements, because they are easements which constantly operated without the intervention of man. Discontinuous easements—such as rights of way—did not, as a rule, go with such grants unless specially mentioned, or unless arising through necessity. But see now sect. 6, Conveyancing Act, 1881. (Supra, p. 276.)

Long enjoyment, again, as has been said, implies a grant. According to the common law, if an easement were enjoyed from time “whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,” that enjoyment was presumed to have had a legal origin. By analogy to the period established by 3 Ed. I. c. 39—commonly called the Statute of Westminster I.—for writs of right, the period of legal memory was fixed as being from the first day of the reign of Richard I. This, again, was qualified by the rules of evidence as to proof of enjoyment established by the Courts. Under these, if uninterrupted and unexplained enjoyment of the easement for twenty years before action brought could be shown, that was evidence from which a jury might infer that the enjoyment originated in a grant which had been lost, or in some other lawful way. This, however, might be defeated by showing that, as a matter of fact, the enjoyment did begin since the reign of Richard I., and that it did not originate in a grant or in other lawful manner. Such was the state of the law when the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71) was passed, and in cases where advantage of the act cannot be taken, it is the law which regulates the acquisition of easements still. Thus a right to air is not an easement within the act, and accordingly, to acquire it by long enjoyment, recourse must be had to the old common law rule as to a lost grant (Bass v. Gregory, 25 Q. B. D. 481; Hall v. The Lichfield Brewery Company, 49 L. J. Ch. 655); and the same is the case as to rights of support for buildings from the soil of the servient tenement (Angus v. Dalton, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 740), or from buildings upon it (Lemaitre v. Davis, 19 Ch. D. 281).¹ As to the person against whom an action lies for interference with such right of support, see Greenwell v. The Low Beechburn Colliery Company, 76 L. T. 759.

Under the Prescription Act, an indefeasible title to a right to light may now be acquired by an enjoyment for twenty years without interruption immediately before action brought, unless such enjoyment has been with the consent in writing of the owner of the servient tenement. (Sect. 3.) An indefeasible title to a right of way, or of water or other easement, can be acquired by an enjoyment for forty years without interruption, unless such enjoyment is by consent or agreement; while a title, which cannot be defeated merely by showing that the enjoyment began prior to that period, can be acquired by twenty years' enjoyment. (Sect. 2.) No break in such enjoyment for a lesser time than a year after notice is to be an interruption within the Act. (Sect. 4.)

¹ In Angus v. Dalton, Lord Selborne, C., expresses an opinion that rights to support for buildings are easements within sect. 2 of the Prescription Act. The words "other easement" in that section have, however, been usually interpreted as applying only to easements of the same kind as rights of way, and Lord Selborne's view was not adopted by any of the other judges (save, to a certain extent, by Lindley, J.) who delivered judgments and opinions in that great case which is now the leading authority on prescription of easements.

B. Rights to take part of Land's Profits.—Rights to take part of the profits or produce of land belonging to another person are of four kinds: (a) Seignories; (b) Profits à prendre; (c) Rents and annuities charged on land; (d) Tithes. A very short notice of each of these will be sufficient for our purpose.

Seignory.—As we have seen, before the statute Quia Emptores the relation of landlord and tenant could subsist between the grantor and grantee of land in fee simple. When such a relation subsisted the grantor was entitled to homage, fealty, and such services as were reserved in the grant, from the tenant. He had not, however, any estate in the land, but merely a possibility of reverter in case the tenant's interest escheated. These rights of the grantor or lord constituted a seignory or lordship.

Since the statute Quia Emptores it is impossible, in England, to create, except by royal charter, the relation of landlord and tenant between the grantor and grantee of land in fee simple. Accordingly, probably all seignories now existing originated before the date of that statute. (See supra, p. 31.) They are now found usually connected with manors in which are lands of copyhold tenure. In such cases the grant of the manor carries with it, without express mention, the seignory over the free tenancies of the manor, the seignory being here strictly appendant to the manor. Sometimes, however, seignories exist in gross.

Profits à prendre.—Profits à prendre are rights to take part of the natural produce of land, the ownership of which is vested in another. The most important kinds are what are called rights of common. These are of four kinds: (a) common of pasture, or the right to graze cattle on another's land ; (b) common of piscary, or the right to fish in another's waters ; (c) common of turbary, or the right to dig turf for firebote—for the fires in the house to which the right is annexed ; (d) common of estovers, or the right to take estovers. (See supra, p. 51.)

Commons of all kinds seem to have arisen out of the organization of the old village community. When a tract of land was occupied by a community, the better part of the land was portioned out among the families composing the community, while the remainder was the common land of all, to be used by them for pasturing their cattle, and for providing them with turf and wood. This common land was called the waste of the manor. Gradually, however, as the chief of the community or lord of the manor became more and more important, the waste ceased to be regarded as the common land of the manor, that is, the joint property of the freeholders of the manor, and began to be considered the freehold of the lord, over which the freeholders had merely certain rights of common for their cattle, and sometimes also rights to cut turbary, to take estovers, and to fish. (Maine's Village Communities in the East and West, p. 135.)

Of the various kinds of common, common of pasture is incomparably the most important. It may be either appendant or appurtenant to a freehold of a manor, or it may be held in gross. It is appendant when it arises of common right. (2 Bl. Com. 32.) It then is annexed to arable land only, and subsists over the waste of the manor in which the land lies. In such case, the right is to depasture such animals as are necessary for the land, such as horses and oxen to plough it, and cows and sheep to manure it ; and the number of cattle which may be depastured when it is not definitely fixed is confined to the number the land, to which the right is annexed, can support during winter, the number levant and couchant on the land as this is called. It is appurtenant when it arises by prescription or grant, and is claimable for land in a different manor, or for land not arable, or for beasts not necessary for the proper cultivation of the soil, as goats or swine. It is in gross when the right is not annexed to the ownership of land either in the manor or out of it. In common of pasture in gross the number of cattle which may be depastured is usually fixed, but it may be those levant and couchant on a certain farm. When the former, the right may be claimed by prescription or grant; when the latter, it must be claimed under an express grant.¹

Another kind of common of pasture is common because of vicinage. It consists of the right which the owners of separate strips of unenclosed land have of turning their cattle to depasture over the whole tract.

Rights of common, whether appendant or appurtenant, pass with a grant of the land to which they are annexed without special mention in the grant. (Sect. 6, Conveyancing Act, 1881.)

Rights of common may be put an end to either by the inclosure—or approvement—of the waste over which they subsist, or by extinguishment. Under the Statute of Merton (20 Hen. III. c. 4), the lord of the manor was given power to approve the waste, provided he left unenclosed sufficient to satisfy the commoners' right. Now, enclosure usually takes place under the Inclosure Acts (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 56; and 45 Vict. c. 15, s. 2), with the sanction of the Land Commissioners. (Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 48; and see Law of Commons Amendment Act, 1893.) Extinguishment may arise from release—a release of part of the common land extinguished the right over the remainder—and unity of possession of land to which the right is annexed and the land subject to the right of common.

¹ Copyholders often enjoy rights of common over the waste of the manor of which they are parcel. Unlike freeholders, however, they are not entitled to them by general custom of the realm, but by special custom of the manor.

There are some other profits à prendre which may simply be mentioned. Of these, a several fishery is the best known. It consists in the exclusive right to take fish in a navigable river, the bed of which belongs to the owner of the fishery. Such a right may be granted to a person having no property in the river bed. (Fitzgerald v. Firbank, (1897) 2 Ch. 96.) Grants of a right to enter upon the land and take the minerals may also be considered grants of profits à prendre.

Franchises.—Closely akin to profits à prendre are franchises which savour of the land. A franchise or liberty is "a regal privilege in the hands of a subject." (2 Bl. Com. 153.) It can only originate in a grant by the Crown, and when it savours of the land it consists of a right to do something upon, or take something from, land which belongs to another. The more usual franchises are free fishery, or the exclusive right to fish in a public river, free warren, or the exclusive right to kill and take beasts and fowls of warren on another person's land, that is, hares, conies, pheasants and partridges, rights to tolls, to treasure trove, to wrecks, and other prerogative rights of a similar kind. There are other and more common franchises which do not savour of the land. These will be referred to in Part IV.

Rents and Annuities charged on Land.—A rent or an annuity charged on land is a right to share in the profits of land belonging to another. Such rents or annuities are incorporeal hereditaments, and can be held in the same estates as the land itself. They may be created without formal words, and either at common law or under the Statute of Uses. Before, however, they can affect the land on which they are charged, they must be registered, unless they arise under marriage settlements (18 Vict. c. 15, s. 12), or by will. (Sect. 14.) This statute applies only to annuities for life or lives, or for terms of years or greater estates determinable with life. An unregistered grant is good against subsequent volunteers with or without notice; but it is not good against subsequent purchasers for value, save where these had notice of the charge. (Greaves v. Tofield, 14 Ch. D. 563.)

In the preceding parts of this work, the remedies for rents and annuities charged on land and their incidents generally (see supra, p. 33), have been pointed out. It is sufficient to add here two further points. In the first place, at common law there was no escheat on the death without a will and without heirs of the owner of a rent-charge in fee simple. The rent sank into the land, or was extinguished for the benefit of the owner thereof. Now, under the Intestates' Estates Act, 1884, s. 4, apparently there is an escheat of a rent-charge, but whether for the benefit of the mesne lord—where the land subject to it is held of a mesne lord—or of the Crown is not very clear. In the second place, sect. 28 of the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), which passes the fee in realty devised without the necessity of words of limitation in the will, applies only to realty existing at the death of the testator. Accordingly, if an existing rent-charge or annuity in fee is devised, the fee will pass without words of inheritance being used in the will; but if the will creates a new rent-charge or annuity, that will be only a charge or annuity for the life of the devisee unless a different intention appears in the will. (Nichols v. Hawkes, 10 Hare, 342.)

Tithes.—Tithes consist of the right to a tenth part of the profits of the land, whether these profits arise from the natural growth on the land, or the stock upon it, or the labour bestowed upon it. Formerly, they were payable in kind, but now a multitude of Acts of Parliament have brought about their commutation into a rent-charge which varies in amount according to the price of corn. Formerly, too, they were usually paid by the tenant in possession of the land, but now by the Tithe Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. 8), they are made payable in all cases by the owner, and any contract between the owner and the tenant under which the latter is to pay them is made void.

Tithes being originally an endowment for the support of the church, when they belong to the rector of the parish they are his by common right. A vicar, when entitled to them, takes them by gift or by prescription. Occasionally, before the Reformation, they became the property of monasteries. But until the dissolution of the monasteries they seem to have been exclusively in ecclesiastical hands. On the Reformation, however, those belonging to the dissolved monasteries were confiscated to the Crown. The Acts of Parliament confiscating them gave the king power to grant them by letters patent to lay persons (called lay impropriators). (27 Hen. VIII. c. 28, s. 2, and 31 Hen. VIII. c. 13, ss. 18 and 19.)

Tithes in lay hands are incorporeal hereditaments held in the same estates as subsist in freehold land, and transferable by the same modes as estates in freehold land. (32 Hen. VIII. c. 7, s. 7.) They descend like freehold estates, with this difference, that they are not subject to any local custom of descent which affects the land out of which they issue. This arises from their being regarded as an inheritance altogether distinct from the land. From this view two other consequences follow. When the land and the tithes issuing out of it belong to the same person, there is no merger at common law, though there may now be merger under statute. And, in the same circumstances, the tithes do not go with a grant of the land, unless they are specifically mentioned in the conveyance.

When tithes belong to the rector or vicar of the parish, he owns them as a corporation sole. (See p. 330.) He personally is entitled to the benefit of them for his life. On his death the title to them is in abeyance until a new rector or vicar is inducted into the profits of the living. The new rector or vicar's title then reverts back to the death of his predecessor.

C. Right to or to appoint to Office connected with Land.
—The most important right to, or to appoint to, an office which entitles the office-holder to a part of the profits of, or to an interest in, land, is what is called an advowson.

Advowsons.—An advowson is the perpetual right to present to an ecclesiastical benefice. The owner of the right is called the patron of the benefice. Advowsons are either donative—i. e., where the patron is either the Crown, or a private person specially licensed by the Crown, and where the patron appoints by deed without the intervention of the bishop in whose diocese the benefice is; or collative, i. e., where the patron is the bishop himself; or, presentative, i. e., where the right consists in the right to present a proper person to the bishop who is bound to institute such person into the office of the cure of souls and to induct him into the profits of the office.

An advowson presentative, when owned not in virtue of a spiritual dignity or office, is an incorporeal hereditament, and may be enjoyed either in gross, or as appendant to a manor. It may be held for estates like freehold land; and it is subject to the patron's widow's right to dower, which right takes the form of the widow having the right to the third presentation. It is alienable by deed, and is assets for the payment of the debts of the patron. (Co. Litt. 374b.)

Sometimes the right of presentation has to be exercised by the patron on the nomination of another person. Thus, when the advowson is the subject of a trust, the trustee holds the right of presentation, but the right of nomination is in the cestui que trust; and when it is the subject of a mortgage, the mortgagee presents, but the mortgagor nominates. Sometimes, again, the right to present upon the next vacancy is separated by sale or assignment from the advowson. In such a case, this right of next presentation is a chattel real, and on the death of the owner goes to his executors. The right of next presentation cannot be sold during a vacancy, such an alienation constituting the offence of simony (31 Eliz. c. 6; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 122, ss. 2, 5, 9); and on the sale of the advowson itself during a vacancy, the right remains in the vendor. No clergyman, however, can sell or assign any patronage which he holds by virtue of his dignity or spiritual office. (3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, s. 42.) Nor can a clergyman buy the next presentation for his own preferment, even when the church is full, though he may purchase the advowson itself. (12 Anne, st. 2, c. 12, s. 2.) And by 11 Geo. III. c. 17, s. 5, a grant of an advowson or of a presentation by a papist patron is void except when it is to a protestant for valuable consideration and for the protestant's benefit, while a devise of an advowson by a papist is void if it be for the benefit of the heirs or family of the papist owner.

When the advowson is held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common, all the tenants must concur in the presentation. If they cannot agree upon a clerk, and each presents one on his own account, the bishop may induct either or refuse to induct either. In the latter case, unless a joint presentation is made within six months, the right to present lapses. (2 Bl. Com. 182.) When it is held in coparcenary all the coparceners should concur in the presentation, but in case of disagreement, the eldest coparcener or her husband or grantee, is entitled to the first presentation, the next to the second, and so on in order of age. By sect. 2 of 7 Anne, c. 18, on the partition of an advowson held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common, the rule applicable to disagreeing coparceners applies to the former joint tenants or tenants in common.

By sect. 4 of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3), all presentations must be in writing. Usually, they are made by means of an ordinary letter to the bishop, and in every case they may be revoked by the patron at any time before actual presentation.

Other Offices.—There are some ancient offices connected with land, such as stewardships of manors and rangerships of forests, which are incorporeal hereditaments. (4 Inst. 87.) Such offices are, however, not of sufficient importance to be considered in an elementary work.

Titles of Honour.—Like ancient offices, titles of honour arose originally out of duties connected with the land, and, as a rule, they still savour of it and are tenements. (Co. Litt. 2 a.) Like franchises, they can only arise by grant from the Crown; they may be created either by letters patent or by writ. The former is now the usual mode of creation. If created by letters patent, they must be limited to the grantee and his heirs; if by writ, they are hereditary, without mention of the grantee's heirs. (2 Bl. Com. 118.)

When a title of honour savours of the land, and is limited by patent, it is a tenement and may be held in fee simple, fee tail, or special tail. When it descends to females it is not held in coparcenary, but falls into abeyance till one heir alone is entitled, or until the sovereign revives the title in favour of one of the coparceners or her heir. (2 Bl. Com. 215.)

SECTION II.

RIGHTS OVER GOODS OWNED BY OTHERS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Ownership and Possession.....	288	Bailment	289
Trover	289	Lien	291

Ownership and Possession.—Rights over goods arising out of contracts with the owner of the goods are not regarded at common law as giving those entitled to them any share in the ownership of the goods over which they subsist. These rights are regarded as affecting not the ownership, but merely the possession of the goods. Such rights, however, when they are enforceable against the goods themselves, without the consent of the owner, are part of the right of ownership over the goods, much as a lease for a time certain is now part of the ownership of land. (See supra, p. 82.) When they are not so enforceable, they can scarcely be considered part of the ownership, but merely as a licence to hold or use the goods at the will of the real owner, akin in their nature to licences to go upon land.

Rights over goods owned by others, whether enforceable against the will of the owner or not, are divisible into three classes—rights by trover, by bailment, or by lien.

Trover.—Trover is from the French verb trouver, to find. When a person finds goods which have been lost, he is entitled, as we have seen, to hold them against everybody except their rightful owner (Armory v. Delamirie, supra, p. 255), whose property in them is unaffected by the loss of their possession. (The same is the case where the person obtains possession in any other lawful way. See infra, p. 291.) If the finder, or other person in possession, refuses on demand to deliver them to the rightful owner, the latter can recover them by action. This action was formerly called an action of trover and conversion, or, more shortly, of trover. The conversion—that is, the determination to convert the goods to the finder's own use as evidenced by his refusal to deliver them up—was the gist of the action, and, accordingly, it came to lie for all unlawful detaining of goods, whether the detained possession originated in finding or not. Forms of action have now been abolished under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), but the principle upon which relief is given remains unaffected.

Bailment.—When goods are delivered by their owner to another person who takes possession of them subject to a condition to return them as soon as the purpose, or the period for which they were delivered, is fulfilled or determined, the transaction is called a bailment of the goods. The owner is then the bailor of the goods, the person to whom they are delivered the bailee.

Bailments may be divided according as the bailment is for the benefit of the bailor alone, or for the benefit of the bailee alone, or for their common advantage. Bailments of the first class are: depositum, or simple bailment, where the thing is kept by the bailee for the use of the bailor, and mandatum, where the thing is to be carried or dealt with in some way by the bailee. In both depositum and mandatum the bailee receives no payment for his trouble, and in both cases he is responsible for injuries to or loss of the thing only when such injuries or loss are due to gross negligence on his part. Bailments of the second class are of one kind only—commodatum, or loan, where the thing delivered is of a useful nature, and the bailor gives the bailee permission to use it without receiving payment for doing so. Here the bailee is responsible for injuries and loss due to slight negligence on his part. The last class consists of locatio rei, where the bailee hires the thing; radium, or pledge, where the thing is delivered as a security for a debt due by the bailor to the bailee (see supra, p. 188); and locatio operis faciendi, where the thing is delivered to be carried or otherwise dealt with by the bailee for payment. In all these cases, in the absence of express agreement on the point, the bailee is liable for injuries and loss arising from ordinary negligence of himself or his servants, that is, a less degree of care than an ordinary owner shows in respect to his own goods. (Coggs v. Barnard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909; 1 Sm. L. C.; Coupé Co. v. Maddick, (1891) 2 Q. B. 413.)

It is unnecessary to enter here at any length into the other incidents attached by the general law to the different kinds of bailments. One or two points may, however, be referred to. In depositum, when the bailee is an innkeeper, and the things deposited are the luggage of guests using his inn; and in locatio operis faciendi, when the bailee is a common carrier, and the goods bailed are goods delivered to him to be carried for hire, the bailee is liable for all injury and loss happening to them while they are in his inn or in his custody, save injury or loss arising through natural decay of the goods themselves, or through the act of God, or of the Queen's enemies. (As to inn-keepers, see Calye's Case, 8 Coke, 32; 1 Sm. L. C.; as to common carriers, Dale v. Hall, 1 Wils. 281.) In the case of both innkeepers and common carriers, their common law liability has, however, been modified by statute. (Innkeepers' Liability Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 41); Carriers Act, 1830 (11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 68); Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31); as extended and amended by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 92 and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 48.)

In every class of bailment, the bailee, if deprived by the act of a wrongdoer of the possession of the goods, can recover it by an action of trover. (Sutton v. Buck, 2 Taunt. 302.) The bailor has the same right in every kind of bailment save those which entitle the bailee to exclude him from the possession of the goods, when the right of recovery is in the bailee exclusively. The reason of this rule is that the law merely decides who is entitled to the possession of goods; it never decides who owns them. The bailee, as the person legally in possession, is always entitled to possession of the goods as against a wrongdoer. (Armory v. Delamirie, supra.) The bailor as owner is also entitled to it, except where by agreement the bailee has the exclusive right to it. The classes of bailments where the bailee has that exclusive right irrespective of special agreement are pledges and hiring agreements.

Lien.—When a person in possession of certain goods is entitled to retain possession of them until a particular debt, or the balance of a running account, is paid by the owner of the goods, he is said to have a lien on the goods.

Liens are either particular or general. A particular lien is the right to retain possession of the goods in regard to which the debt in question was incurred. Thus in the bailments locatio rei, vadium, or locatio operis faciendi, the bailee has a particular lien on the goods hired, pledged, or dealt with, for the hire of the goods, the money advanced on them, or the labour expended in connection with them respectively. (Skinner v. Upshaw, 2 Ld. Raym. 752.) We have already referred to the lien which an unpaid seller of goods has as long as the goods remain in his possession. (See supra, p. 222.) A general lien, on the other hand, is a right arising by express or implied contract, to retain possession of goods until payment is made by their owner of any balance due on transactions between him and the person in possession of his goods. Such a contract is implied in certain trades and professions. Thus, a solicitor has a lien on the papers of his client for remuneration due to him for professional services. (Under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, the Court may declare a solicitor employed in a suit or action entitled to a charge upon any property recovered or preserved in such suit or action.) Again, an innkeeper has a lien upon the goods of a guest for the amount of the guest's unpaid bill (Mulliner v. Florence, 3 Q. B. D. 384); and under the Innkeepers Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 38), s. 1, the innkeeper under certain circumstances is entitled to sell the guest's goods to satisfy the debt. And in many other trades, such as those of wharfingers, factors, bankers, calico printers, &c., by the custom of the trade such a lien is implied.

A lien, whether particular or general, gives, as has been said, merely the right to retain the goods. Wherever there is a further right to sell, as in the case of innkeepers' liens, that right arises under statute. And the lien may be lost either by parting with the possession of the goods, or by taking some other security in lieu of it. But merely taking another security is not in itself sufficient to deprive the possessor of the goods of his lien on them unless there is something in the taking of the security inconsistent with the continuance of the lien.

PART VI.

PROPRIETARY RIGHTS NOT OVER THINGS.

	PAGE
Proprietary Rights not over Things	293
Choses in Action	294
Annuities	300
Personal Annuities	300
Consolidated Bank Annuities	300
Interests in Corporations	302
Shares	304
Stock	307
Debentures	308
Monopolies	309
Patents	310
Copyright	312
Right to perform	314
Trade Marks	315
Trade Names	315

Proprietary Rights not over Things.—Hitherto we have been considering rights which are more or less strictly rights of property. The rights we are now to deal with are, strictly speaking, not rights of property at all, since they do not subsist over any existing physical object. (See supra, p. 2.) They are, however, commonly regarded as proprietary rights, since they usually are lucrative, and therefore property in the popular sense. Most of them are also proprietary, in the further sense that they are not mere rights against certain persons (jura in personam), but rights availing against the whole world (jura in rem).

It is not intended to treat of these rights at any length, partly because they do not properly come within the scope of this work, and partly for the more practical reason that it is impossible to give a satisfactory sketch of them without entering upon an exposition of the law of contracts, the law of wrongs (or torts), and the law affecting joint stock companies, patents, copyrights, insurance, arbitration, trade-marks—in short, almost every department of jurisprudence outside that dealing with crime. Even a separate treatise as large as the whole of the present work would be of little use as a guide to this vast territory. All that can be done in a chapter of such a treatise is to indicate the nature of the rights usually regarded as akin to proprietary rights in their true sense, and leave the reader to seek in special works more detailed information concerning them.

As has been indicated, these rights are very diverse in their nature. They may be divided roughly into five classes:—rights or choses in action; annuities or rights to annual payments not charged upon land; rights or interests in corporations aggregate; and monopolies. Generally speaking, all these rights are personalty, but some of them are hereditaments, and some of them are not merely hereditaments but tenements also, and, as such, entailable under the statute De Donis. (See supra, p. 37.)

Choses in Action.—Formerly, pure personalty was divided into choses in possession (or goods) and choses in action (or rights of action), on the same lines as pure realty was divided into corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments. Of late years, however, many other kinds of proprietary rights which, though personalty and incorporeal in their nature, are not rights of action merely, have sprung up, usually under particular Acts of Parliament; and choses in action are consequently now regarded no longer as a main class of personalty but only as one division, and that not the most important, of a main class which, as opposed to the other main class, choses in possession or corporeal personalty, is now commonly called incorporeal personality on the analogy of the great divisions of reality.

Choses in action arise primarily either *ex delicto*¹ or ex contractu. If a person wrongfully damages me in my person, in my reputation, or in my property, I have a legal right to obtain compensation for the injury. If he lawfully contracts with me to pay me a certain sum of money or to do a certain act, I have a legal right to obtain payment of the money or performance of the act, or compensation in lieu of performance. If the person refuses to recognize my legal rights in such circumstances, my only means of enforcing them is by an action at law. These legal rights, then, are rights which can only be enforced by action. They were therefore called choses or things lying in action.

The policy of the ancient common law being to discourage litigation, assignments of choses in action were not permitted by it. This policy was carried so far, that if any third person assisted the owner of a chose in action to prosecute his claim, he was guilty of maintenance; while if a condition of the help was that the third person was to receive a share or all of the damages or debt recovered, he was guilty of champerty. Gradually, however, a distinction in choses in action was admitted. Where the action was for the doing of an act or for damages for the breach of a duty arising either from contract or wrong, the old rule remained. But where it was for the payment of an ascertained (or liquidated) sum of money—that is, a debt—the law permitted a third person not only to sue in the name of the owner of the right, but to sue for his own private benefit and at his own cost. (Bro. Abr. tit. Choses in Action, pl. 3, 15 Hen. VII. c. 2.) The authority which the owner of the debt gave to the third person to sue in his name was called a power of attorney. It did not need to be by deed, and if given for valuable consideration, it was irrevocable by the original owner of the debt. This was as far as the ordinary common law went in the matter of assigning choses in action.

¹ Some writers object to rights of action ex delicto being called choses in action (see Sir H. Elphinstone's Article, p. 311, Law Quarterly, vol. 9), chiefly on the ground that a mere expectation of damages for a wrong committed can scarcely be called property. Such expectations, however, are treated as property in the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (sect. 168); and the older writers, when they used the phrase chose in action, apply it to rights both ex delicto and ex contractu. (Termes de la Ley, Chose in Action.)

Two other agencies, however, soon carried the right to alienate choses in action much further. The first of these was the practice of merchants. The second was equity. And both these agencies have been helped from time to time by Acts of Parliament recognizing or extending their operation.

By the practice of merchants, which on this point is now declared by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), when a debt was secured by what is called a bill of exchange, the right to sue for it passed along with the title to the bill itself, which was freely transferable. "A bill of exchange is an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to or to the order of a specified person or to bearer." (Sect. 3, sub-sect. 1.) The person who draws the bill is called the drawer, the person on whom it is drawn is called the drawee until he accepts the bill—that is, writes his name across the face of it—when he becomes the acceptor; and is primarily liable for the amount payable on the bill; and the person to whom the payment is to be made is called a payee. When the bill is payable to the person "or bearer," it is transferable by delivery; when to him "or order," it is transferable only by indorsement, that is, by the payee writing his name on the back of the bill and delivering it to the new holder. (Sect. 31.) After indorsement, the transferor becomes an indorser of the bill, and is liable on it, should it, on being presented to the drawee for acceptance or payment, be dishonoured, that is, should acceptance or payment then be refused. Bills may be made payable on sight, or so many days after sight, or at any fixed time. When they become immediately payable, they are said to have matured.

A bill of exchange is not merely assignable—it is negotiable. In other words, any person who takes it bond fide and for value acquires a good title to it, even though the person who assigned it to him had no title to it. In this respect it resembles coin, bank notes, and other promissory notes (3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, made perpetual by 7 Anne, c. 25, and now repealed and re-enacted by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882), and bills of lading (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), which are negotiable also. After maturity a bill or note ceases to be negotiable, though it remains assignable. (Sect. 36, sub-sect. 2, Bills of Exchange Act.)

Exchequer bills payable to bearer are also negotiable, and so are multitudes of securities for debts issued by foreign governments and corporations and made on the face of them payable to the bearer. (London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, (1892) A. C. 201.) Debts due to the Crown have always been assignable by the Crown.

The other agency which advanced the right to alienate choses in action was equity. Equity recognised two classes of choses in action—legal and equitable. Legal choses in action were, of course, those known to the common law; equitable, those enforceable only in the Court of Chancery. Of the latter, the most important, perhaps, were claims to legacies, for which the common law supplied no remedy. The latter kind of choses in action equity permitted to be freely assigned, and after assignment the assignee might sue in Chancery in his own name. As to legal choses in action, practically all those arising ex contractu or in the nature of a debt, equity permitted to be alienated so as to enable the assignee to sue in the name of the assignor. Such alienations, however, did not bind the debtor until he had received notice of them, and they were not allowed to operate in such a way as to prevent his setting off against the assignee any claim he would have been entitled to set off against the original creditor, or as to render invalid any prior assignment of the debt or part of it of which the debtor had received earlier notice. This is what is meant by an assignment subject to all equities.

Besides promissory notes, to which we have already referred, policies of assurance of lives (30 & 31 Vict. c. 144) and of marine assurance (31 & 32 Vict. c. 86) have been made assignable at law by Act of Parliament. And now, by sect. 25, sub-sect. 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, it is enacted that any absolute assignment by writing under the hand of the assignor (not purporting to be by way of charge only) of any debt or other legal chose in action of which express notice in writing shall have been given to the debtor, trustee, or other person from whom the assignor would have been entitled to receive or claim such debt or chose in action, shall be, and be deemed to have been, effectual at law (subject to all equities which would have been entitled to priority over the right of the assignee if that act had not passed) to pass and transfer the legal right to such debt or chose in action from the date of such notice, and all legal and other remedies for the same, and the power to give a good discharge for the same without the concurrence of the assignor.

The effect of this enactment is, shortly, to make every chose in action assignable in equity assignable at law. Consequently, all debts and rights of action ex contractu are now assignable, and all rights arising before breach under contracts, save such as are, by the terms of the contract, not assignable, or from the nature of the contract are not capable of being performed by persons other than the parties to it. Contracts of the latter kind are called personal contracts, and are usually for personal services. How far rights of action ex delicto are assignable it is very difficult to say. Apparently, in cases where the damages are practically liquidated, as in actions of detinue and trover (where the damages are the value of the property detained or converted), the right of action may be assigned. (Cohen v. Mitchell, 25 Q. B. D. 262.) Actions for injuries not to the property but to the person or reputation of the litigant, appear, however, still to be within the old rule which prohibited assignments of choses in action.

On bankruptcy the bankrupt's rights of action—save only those for personal torts—vest in the trustee, as we have already seen. (See supra, p. 252.) And under the act for extending the remedies of creditors against the property of debtors (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12), securities for debts due to the debtor may be seized by the sheriff under the writ of fiery facias. And now, by the Rules of Supreme Court, 1883 (Ord. XLV. r. 1), the Court can order that all debts owing or accruing to a judgment debtor may be attached to answer the judgment. Such an order is called a garnishee order.

On the death of their owner, choses in action arising ex contractu vest in his personal representatives, save where the chose in action is merely a right or benefit arising under a personal contract, in which case it is extinguished by the death of either party to the contract before performance and before breach. On the other hand, choses in action ex delicto are extinguished by the death either of the person who suffered or of the person who committed the wrong before verdict, in all cases, save where the wrong was an injury to property, or where, being a personal tort, it comes within Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, amended by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 95.) As to injuries to property on the death of a person whose personal estate (4 Edw. III. c. 7), or whose real estate (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 2), has, during his lifetime, suffered by another's wrong, the executors or administrators of the deceased may bring an action for such wrong, and the damages recovered are to be part of the deceased personal estate. As to injuries to real estate, the injury must have been done within six months before, and the action must be brought within one year after, the death of the person injured. On the other hand, by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 2, on the death of the wrongdoer—or tort-feasor as he is called—the person wronged can bring his action against the deceased executors or administrators within six months after these executors or administrators have taken on them the administration of the deceased's estate. As to personal torts, when the wrong in question caused the death of the person wronged, Lord Campbell's Act gives a right of action against the wrongdoer for the benefit of the deceased's wife, husband, children, parents, or grand or step children or parents. Such action must be brought within one year of the death of the deceased. With these two exceptions, the maxim of the common law, Actio personalis moritur cum personâ (a personal action dies with the person), still applies to all rights of action ex delicto. (Pulling v. The Great Eastern Rail. Co., 9 Q. B. D. 110.)

Annuities.—We have already dealt with annuities charged upon land. Annuities not charged upon land are called personal annuities. They are personalty, and yet they can be held for estates for life, and in fee simple, and when held in fee simple they will, on the owner's death intestate, go to his heir. They are for this reason sometimes called personal hereditaments. They are not, however, tenements, and cannot, accordingly, be held in fee tail. A limitation to the grantee and the heirs of his body creates merely a conditional fee which the grantee can alienate on the birth of issue. (Earl of Stafford v. Buckley, 2 Ves. sen. 171.) And a personal annuity granted to a man and his heirs will pass under a general bequest of the grantee's personal estate, while one granted to a man "for ever" will, on the grantee's death testate or intestate, go like ordinary personalty, not to the grantee's heir or devisee, but to his executors or administrators.

Perhaps the commonest kind of annuities not charged on land is consolidated bank annuities, or, as they are usually called, consols. These are perpetual annuities (subject to redemption), granted by the Crown as interest for money borrowed by it for national purposes. They are redeemable on the repayment of the money borrowed. Under the National Debt (Conversion) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 2), the annuities are now fixed at the rate of $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum on the borrowed money. The dividends are payable half-yearly, and the right to them is called stock or stock in the funds. This right is personalty, and on the death of the stockholder, it devolves upon his executor or administrator.

Originally, bank annuities were ordinary personal annuities—indeed, they seem to have been the original of personal annuities as now known to the law—but since the national debt was funded shortly after the Revolution, their legal incidents have been set out in the Acts of Parliament under which the various public loans were raised. These acts have now been consolidated by the National Debt Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71).

The most noteworthy incidents of stock in the funds are these:—

- (a.) All dividends on it are paid at, and all transfers of it must be made in the books of, the Bank of England or of Ireland. (Sect. 22.) Before allowing any transfer, the Bank may, if they think it expedient, demand evidence of the title of the person claiming a right to transfer. (Sect. 24.)
- (b.) The interest of a deceased stockholder is transferable by his executors or administrators, notwithstanding any specific bequest of it, but the Bank need not transfer the interest till probate of the will or the grant of administration has been left with them for registration, and they may require all executors who have proved the will to join in the transfer. (Sect. 23.)
- (c.) The stock may be converted into stock certificates payable to bearer, and transferable by delivery.

(Sect. 26.)

- (d.) Any one having an interest in stock standing in another's name may prevent any transfer of it by serving on the Bank an office copy of the affidavit as to his interest, and of the notice required under Rules of the Supreme Court, Ord. XLVI. r. 4. This process is equivalent in its effect to the former writ of distringas.
- (e.) Stock cannot be taken in execution under a writ of fiery facias; but under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14 and 15, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 28, s. 1, a judgment creditor can obtain a charging order on the debtor's stock. Such order operates as a distringas.
- (f.) Stock is not "goods" within sect. 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. (See supra, p. 220.)

Interests in Corporations Aggregate.—Corporations (see supra, p. 101) are of two kinds—corporations sole and corporations aggregate. The former consist of one individual at a time, the latter of more than one. (See infra, p. 330.) It is with the latter only that we are now concerned.

A corporation aggregate differs from an unincorporated group of individuals owning property together, or acting together for a common purpose, in this respect, that it is recognized by the law as in itself a person (persona) or legal unit, having an existence altogether distinct from the individuals composing it. These individuals have no personal interest in its property, and at common law they had no personal liability for its debts. Its acts are not their Acts, and they as much as strangers are bound to respect its legal rights. Its corporate identity is manifested by its common seal, which alone gives validity to its corporate acts.

Corporations aggregate may be divided primarily into political and non-political corporations. The former of these include municipal corporations, county councils, and such like, and with them we have little to do save to point out that when they, under the authority of Parliament, borrow money for local works or other public purposes, the stock thereby created corresponds closely to stock in government securities, except that usually it must be redeemed within a given period. Non-political corporations, on the other hand, may themselves be divided into commercial corporations—more commonly called companies,¹ and benevolent or religious corporations—more commonly called societies. It is commercial corporations with which we are now most concerned.

Commercial corporations—that is, corporations formed for the purpose of making profits for their members—may be established by charter granted by the Crown, or by special Act of Parliament, or by registration under the provisions of the Companies Act, 1862. Where a corporation is established by charter or special act, its constitution and powers depend upon the provisions of the charter or act. These, however, usually follow similar lines, and to ensure this in the case of corporations established by special act the general provisions contained in the Companies Clauses Acts, 1845—1869, are made applicable to them unless expressly excluded by the special act. Besides these, there are numerous other acts of a similar character applying specially to companies formed for definite purposes, such as constructing gas-works or waterworks for towns, harbours or piers, cemeteries, &c. The object of all these acts is to give uniformity, as far as possible, to corporations established by special acts for similar purposes.

¹ The word company is often applied to unincorporated groups of individuals carrying on business in common, each individual having a share of the joint capital which he could alienate at will. This latter characteristic distinguishes them from ordinary partnerships—where the relation between the partners is personal, and cannot be altered by the introduction of a new partner, save by common consent—which in other respects they are. (Smith v. Anderson, 15 Ch. D. 247 (at 273).)

Charters and special acts are now the means used for establishing commercial corporations of a public nature, such as corporations having semi-sovereign rights in foreign countries and corporations carrying on great public undertakings, like railways, town waterworks, &c. The common mode of incorporating companies for ordinary trading purposes is by registration under the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89).

That act prohibits the formation of any banking partnership of more than ten members, and of any other trading partnership of more than twenty members. (Sect. 4.) A partnership, however, of at least seven members may, under its provisions, be incorporated into a joint stock company by the members subscribing a memorandum of association, and, in some cases (see infra, p. 306), articles of association, and having these registered with the registrar of joint stock companies. (Sect. 17.) The memorandum of association must in all cases state—(a) the name of the proposed company; (b) the part of the United Kingdom in which it proposes to have its place of business; and (c) its proposed objects. When there are articles of association (as there usually are), these set out the regulations under which the company is to carry on its business. (Sects. 6—10, Companies Act, 1862.)

Companies established by registration under the Companies Act, 1862, differ from corporations at common law in two very important respects. Ordinary corporations, as we have seen, must use their common seal to give validity to their corporate acts and, more particularly, their contracts. Joint stock companies need use their common seal only in making contracts, which, if made between individuals, would, by English law, have to be under seal. All other contracts may be made by an agent on behalf of the company in the same way as they are made between individuals. (Sect. 37, Companies Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 131.) Again, in corporations at common law, the corporators have no personal liability for the corporation's debts. In a joint stock company under the act, the incorporators may enjoy this immunity, or they may enjoy it to a certain degree only, or they may not enjoy it at all, according as the company is limited or unlimited and their shares in it are fully paid up or not.

In an unlimited company, every member, on the dissolution—or winding-up as it is called—of the company, is liable rateably with the other members for the company's debts. In a limited company, the members' liability may be limited either by guarantee or by shares. (Sect. 7, Companies Act, 1862.) If it is to be limited by guarantee, then the memorandum of association must state that each member undertakes, in case the company is wound up while he is a member, to be liable for its debts rateably with the other members up to a certain amount. If it is to be limited by shares, then the memorandum of association must state that, and also set out the proposed amount of the company's capital, dividing it into shares of a certain fixed amount. Then each shareholder's liability is limited to the amount of the shares he holds. If the shares are only partly paid up—if, for instance, each of his shares is for 100*l.*, and only 50*l.* has been paid up on them—then he is liable to be called upon either by the company itself, or, on winding up, by the liquidator, to pay the remaining 50*l.*, and if he fails to do so, his shares may be forfeited. If, however, the whole amount is paid up, he is liable for no further calls, either from the company or the liquidator. His shares are then called “fully paid-up” shares.

When a company is limited either by guarantee or by shares, the word “limited” must be the last word of its registered name, and its registered name must be displayed outside its registered place of business, and must be used in all its notices, bills, cheques, invoices, receipts, and papers generally.

When a company is unlimited, or limited by guarantee, it must, and when it is limited by shares, it may, register with its memorandum of association articles of association setting out such regulations as to the conduct of its business as may seem expedient. (Sect. 14.) The memorandum and articles of association together form the constitution or deed of settlement of the company. The articles may be altered subsequently by special resolution of the members of the company (sect. 50), but the memorandum can only be altered in some particulars. Thus the capital may be increased, the shares may be divided into larger amounts, or the paid-up shares may be changed into stock by special resolution. (Sect. 12.) And the name may be changed with the consent of the Board of Trade (sect. 13), and the capital may be reduced with the consent of the Court (sects. 9—20, Companies Act, 1867) by a similar resolution. But practically, with these reservations, the memorandum is unalterable.

In all companies a register of members must be kept (sect. 25, Companies Act, 1862); and in companies in which the capital is divided into shares, a copy of this register, with other particulars, must be made out annually, and forwarded to the registrar of joint stock companies. (Sect. 26.)

A company registered under the Companies Act, 1862, is liable to be compulsorily wound up when (inter alia) it is unable to pay its debts. The proceedings are now regulated by the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63). It is sufficient to say here that the policy of that act is to approximate as far as possible the procedure in the winding-up of companies to that on the bankruptcy of individuals. As to the liability of members on winding up, besides the limitation in the case of limited companies to the amount unpaid on the shares or the amount guaranteed, the following limitations obtain in all cases:—

No past member of any company is liable to contribute—

- (a) To the assets in any way where he has, at the date of the winding-up, ceased to be a member of the company for one year or more;
- (b) When he has not so long ceased to be a member, to any debt or liability contracted since he ceased to be a member ;

- (c) In any case, until it appears that the existing members are unable to satisfy the contributions required to be made by them under the act. (Sect. 38, Companies Act, 1862.)

With regard to interests in joint stock companies under the Companies Act, 1862, the following points may be noticed :—

- (a) Shares, stock, or other interests in them are personalty. (Sect. 22, Companies Act, 1862.) So are interests in companies established by special Act of Parliament, with the exception of interests in one or two ancient companies, of which the New River and the River Avon are the most notable instances. Interests in these are tenements within the statute De Donis (Drybutter v. Bar- tholomew, 2 P. Wms. 127) ;
- (b) Fully paid-up shares may be consolidated into stock.
(Sect. 12.) The difference between shares and stock is this : shares cannot be assigned in fragments ; stock may be so assigned (per Lord
Cairns, C., Morrice v. Aylmer, L. R. 10 Ch. App.
148, at p. 154) ;
- (c) A certificate under the common seal of the company is prima facie evidence that the shares or stock therein specified belong to the person in whose name they stand (sect. 31) ;
- (d) Shares and stock may be transferred in the manner prescribed by the regulations of the company.
(Sect. 22.) In companies established by special act incorporating the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, transfers must be by deed registered at the office of the company ;
- (e) Warrants for fully paid-up shares and stock may be issued which will entitle the holder or bearer of them to the shares or stock specified in them.

The title to the shares or stock can then be transferred by delivery of the certificate (sect. 28, Companies Act, 1867);

(f) Shares and stock of a deceased member are transferable by his personal representatives (sect. 24, Companies Act, 1862);

(g) Shares and stock are subject to the provisions of Ord. XLVI. r. 4, Rules of Supreme Court, and of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 28 (see supra, p. 302);

(h) Shares and stock are not goods within sect. 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. (See supra, p. 220.)

Companies established by special Acts of Parliament, if they have borrowing powers under their acts, and companies registered under the Companies Act, 1862, if, by their memorandum and articles of association, they are entitled to borrow, may raise loans by the issue of debentures. By debenture is meant a security for a debt issued under the seal of the borrowing company. It may or may not constitute a charge upon the property of the company (Edmonds v. Blaina Furnaces Co., 36 Ch. D. 215), though in ordinary practice it usually does. When it does constitute such a charge, the charge may be on a specific portion of the company's property, and therefore practically a legal mortgage on it; or it may be a charge on the company's property generally, leaving the company power to deal with and dispose of the property in the usual way of business, until a receiver is appointed on behalf of the debenture holders, or until the commencement of winding-up proceedings. In the latter case the debenture is called a "floating" charge. (Government Stock, &c. Investment Co. v. Manila Railway Co., (1897) A. C. 81.)

When debentures are charged on a specific portion of the company's property, they are legal mortgages of it, and the holders have the rights of legal mortgagees. When they are floating securities the holders' remedy is by appointing a receiver. They have no power of sale, and if the undertaking be of a public nature, no power to appoint a manager.

Companies established by Act of Parliament incorporating Part III. of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863, may raise money on debenture stock to the same extent as they are authorized to raise money on mortgages or bonds. The holders of such stock are entitled to their full interest before any dividend is paid to shareholders, but they are not entitled to repayment of their capital, and they are not entitled to share in the government of the company. Companies registered under the Companies Act, 1862, may be empowered under their memorandum of association to issue debenture stock. Both companies incorporating the Companies Clauses Act, 1863, and companies registered under the Companies Act, 1862, are required to keep a register of charges affecting their property, and these do not require registration under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878.

Monopolies.—In ordinary language a monopoly means the exclusive right to make, deal in or use a particular thing. In English law, however, the term is applied only to such an exclusive right arising under a grant from the Crown. (3 Inst. 181.) In this restricted sense it is now practically synonymous with what in modern times is usually called a patent.

In the broader sense the term includes not merely patents, but copyright, the right of performing dramatic and musical compositions, and the right to trade marks and trade names. For the purpose of arrangement we will use the term in its broader sense, and discuss shortly these different rights under the head of monopolies.

Before treating of these separately we may notice one or two points all have in common :—All are pure personality ; all are freely assignable at law, though trade marks and trade names are not assignable in gross, but only as appendant to the manufactures or business with which they are connected ; and, as to all, the remedy for any infringement of the owner's exclusive right is an injunction restraining the defendant from further infringement and damages for any injury already done.

By a patent is meant a grant from the Crown by letters patent of the exclusive right or privilege of making, using, or selling a certain thing. It is, therefore, a franchise or "a regal privilege in the hands of a subject" (The Queen v. Judge of Halifax County Court, (1891) 2 Q. B. 263), though, unlike most franchises, it does not savour of the land. (Supra, p. 283.) At one time the Crown exercised the right to grant patents to make, use, or sell any article, whether that article was the result of a new invention, or something long the subject of manufacture or commerce in the realm. Whether it ever had any legal claim to this power is very questionable. (See 1 Hawk. P. C. 231.) At any rate, by the Statute of Monopolies, it was definitely prohibited from exercising it except in the case of "the working of new manufactures within the realm," and then the patents were to be granted only to the "true and first inventors" of these new manufactures, and were to continue in force for no greater period than fourteen years from the date of the letters patent. (21 Jac. I. c. 3, s. 6.)

The law as to patents is now consolidated by the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), as amended by 48 & 49 Vict. c. 63, and 51 & 52 Vict. c. 50. This act repeals, along with the other earlier acts, the Statute of Monopolies, but the principles regulating the grant of patents are unaltered. (Sect. 46.)

Under the act, patents are granted by the comptroller of the patent office. All applications for them must be accompanied by a provisional or complete specification, and if the accompanying specification be only provisional, a complete specification must be delivered within nine months of the application, or the application will lapse, subject to a power given to the comptroller to extend the time one month. A complete specification is a full and fair description of the invention; and if the specification delivered be not full and fair, the comptroller may reject it or may require modifications in it. (Sect. 9.) On acceptance of a specification the comptroller advertises the acceptance (sect. 10), and any person may within two months of the date of the advertisement give notice of objection. (Sect. 11.) The comptroller hears the objection—if any—and should he decide against the objection, or should there be no objection, he issues a patent under the seal of the patent office. (Sect. 12.) There is an appeal from the comptroller of patents to the law officers of the Crown. After grant (or before it) application may be made to amend the specification by way of disclaimer, correction or explanation, provided that at the time of application no proceedings affecting the validity of the patent are pending. If such proceedings are pending, amendment can only be made with the consent of the Court. (Sects. 18 and 19.) If the specification is incomplete or ambiguous, unless amended, any patent granted on it is void.

It is unnecessary to enter here on a discussion of the law of patents. The following points, however, may be noted:—

- (a.) The grant of a patent is a matter not of right but of favour.
- (b.) Patents can be granted only for “the working of new manufactures within the realm.”

That is, they must be “manufactures.” A patent is not grantable for a mere idea, but for the actual working improvements in the method of doing or making something.

And they must be “new within the realm.” They must, in other words, be either original discoveries, or, at any rate, processes hitherto not publicly practised or known in this country.

- (c.) They can be granted only to the "true and first inventor" himself—that is, the person who makes the discovery or imports from abroad the novel process. A mere assignee of the invention cannot apply for a patent.

By sect. 5, sub-sect. 1, of the Patents Act, 1883, in the case of a joint application by two or more persons for a patent, it is sufficient if one of the applicants is the true and first inventor.

- (d.) A patent once granted has effect throughout the United Kingdom (sect. 16), and may entitle the patentee to patents in the colonies and in foreign countries. (Sect. 103.)
- (e.) The duration of a patent is fourteen years from the date of application for it (sect. 17); but this period may, on proof that the patentee has been insufficiently remunerated by receipts under the patent, be extended for a further period of seven, or, in exceptional circumstances, of fourteen years. (Sect. 25.) (In re Bower-Barff Patent, (1895) A. C. 675.)
- (f.) The patentee may assign his patent completely, or assign his right as to a certain place (sect. 36), or grant a licence to use it.
- (g.) A register of patents is now kept at the patent office, and all assignments, complete or partial, of registered patents, must be registered. (Sects. 23 and 87.)
- (h.) When the patent is not being worked in the United Kingdom, or when the reasonable requirements of the public as to the invention are not being supplied, or when some other person than the patentee is prevented from using to the best advantage another invention possessed by him, the Board of Trade may order a compulsory licence to be granted. (Sect. 22.)

Copyright may be defined as the exclusive right of producing copies of an original literary, musical, or artistic composition or work. The law as to copyright in literary and musical compositions, maps, plans and charts depends primarily on the Act to amend the Law of Copyright (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45). That affecting artistic works is contained in a multitude of statutes, including 8 Geo. II. c. 13 (amended by 7 Geo. III. c. 38, and 17 Geo. III. c. 57, and extended by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12), which secures copyrights in engravings and prints, and pictures produced by mechanical process; 38 Geo. III. c. 71 (amended by 54 Geo. III. c. 71), which secures copyright in sculptures; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, which secures copyright in original paintings, drawings, and photographs; and 46 & 47 Vict. c. 57 (the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883), which secures copyright in registered designs.

Dealing with the most important of these enactments—the Act to amend the Law of Copyright—it secures to the author of an original book the copyright of it for the term of the author's life and seven years more, or of forty-two years after its publication, whichever may be the longer. (Sect. 3.) "Book" here includes every volume, part or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letter-press, sheet of music, map, chart, or plan separately published. (Sect. 2.) And it has been held that a newspaper is within this definition (Walter v. Howe, 17 Ch. D. 708), while the engravings and other illustrations of a volume are protected as part of the book. (Bogue v. Houlston, 5 De G. & Sm. 267.) Copyright is only given—independently, that is, of inventions under the International Copyright Acts (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68; 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33)—when the publication has taken place first in the British dominions (49 & 50 Vict. c. 33, s. 8), or simultaneously in the British dominions and abroad. (Buxton v. James, 5 De G. & Sm. 80.)

As to contributions to encyclopædias, periodicals, and works published in a series of books or parts, or other miscellaneous work, the proprietor shall have the right to re-publish them, in conjunction with the other matter with which they originally appeared, at any time within twenty-eight years after the first publication, provided he engaged the author to write the contributions and paid him for them. He cannot, however, except by agreement with the author, publish them separately. At the end of the twenty-eight years the exclusive right to publish his contributions reverts to the author. (Sect. 18.)

Provision is made for the registration at Stationers' Hall of books entitled to copyright under the act. (Sect. 11.) Strictly speaking, however, registration is not requisite to obtain copyright; it is requisite merely to obtain a remedy for the infringement of it. (Trade Auxiliary Co. v. Middlesborough, &c. Tradesmen's Protection Association, 40 Ch. D. 430.) And registration at any time before the writ of summons issues, even though subsequent to the alleged infringement, is sufficient to support an action for piracy. As to periodicals, registration of the first number issued is enough to protect the whole series (sect. 19); and where the first number has not been registered, registration of any subsequent number is enough to protect that particular number's contents. (Dick v. Yates, 18 Ch. D. 76.) Assignments of copyright may be made by entry in the register. (Sect. 13.)

A right akin to copyright is the exclusive right to perform publicly a dramatic or musical composition. This right is secured to the author by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 15, as amended by sects. 20, 21, and 22 of the Act to amend the Law of Copyright, which apply the provisions of that act as to registration of copyrights to the right to performance. The assignment of the copyright of a musical or dramatic piece does not convey the right of performance unless the entry of the assignment in the register is accompanied by a statement of the intention to convey it. (Sect. 22.) By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 40 (Copyright (Musical Compositions) Act, 1882), when the owner of a musical composition wishes to retain the right of public performance of it he must, on publishing the composition, print on each copy a notice to this effect. And by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 17 (Copyright (Musical Compositions) Act, 1888), power is given to the Court to reduce the penalty for infringement of such right of performance which, by the 3 Will. IV. c. 15, s. 2, was fixed at not less than forty shillings for each breach, with full costs.

Akin also to copyright are the rights to trade marks and trade names. Trade marks are marks commonly used by manufacturers to distinguish goods or classes of goods produced by them. The Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), as amended by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 50, makes provision for their registration at the Patent Office (sect. 78), and no person shall be entitled to institute proceedings for the infringement of a trade mark unless the same has been registered, or registration of it has been refused. (Sect. 77.) Previous to the Registration Acts, the right to a trade mark, like the right to a trade name, had to be acquired by the public use of it; but now an application for the registration of a trade mark is made equivalent to its public use (sect. 75), and, accordingly, if no other person be entitled to the mark, it makes a good title to it. And registration is to be prima facie evidence of the registered owner's right to it. (Sect. 76.) The right to a registered trade mark can be assigned only with the goodwill of the business concerned in the particular goods or classes of goods for which it has been registered. (Sect. 70.)

Trade names are names associated by public user with certain firms, or undertakings, or manufactures. When such a name has been so associated for such a time as to become identified in the public mind with the firm, undertaking, or manufacture to which it is applied, then it becomes, in a sense, the property of that firm, or of the proprietors of the undertakings or manufactures. (Borthwick v. Evening Post, 37 Ch. D. 449.) At any rate, the first users of it have a legal right to prevent any other persons so using it as to mislead the public. (Saxlehner v. Apollinaris Co., (1897) 1 Ch. 893.) When the use of one's own name in a particular way is calculated to induce the public to regard his goods as the goods of another person of the same name, the latter can restrain its use in that way. (Reddaucay v. Banham, (1896) A. C. 211.)

PART VII.

PERSONS UNDER DISABILITIES AS TO PROPERTY.

	PAGE
Disabilities and Persons.....	317
Section I.—NATURAL PERSONS	318
Specific Disabilities.....	319
General Disabilities	321
Section II.—ARTIFICIAL PERSONS.....	330
Corporations.....	330
Charities	332

Disabilities and Persons.—Disability as regards property consists in any incapacity to acquire, hold, or dispose of property in general or some particular kind of property. To make this incapacity a disability it must attach to the person subject to it as an individual or as a member of a certain class. The ownership or alienation of certain things is sometimes made by the general law impossible or illegal. In such cases the incapacity of a given person to own them, or to convey a title to them, is not a disability, but an incident of the legal nature of the thing itself.

We will discuss shortly the law as to disabilities according as they affect natural persons or individuals, and artificial persons or corporations sole and aggregate.

SECTION I.

NATURAL PERSONS.

	PAGE		PAGE
General Rule	318	(b.) Married Women	323
Specific Disabilities	319	(c.) Lunatics	326
(a.) Act of Parliament	319	(d.) Illegitimate Persons ..	328
(b.) Public Policy	319	(e.) Aliens	328
(c.) Conditions of Settlement	320	(f.) Bankrupts	329
General Disabilities	321	(g.) Convicts	329
(a.) Infants	322

General Rule.—With regard to natural persons the general rule is that every individual having the shape of a human being is qualified to acquire and hold all kinds of property recognized by English law. Monsters—that is, creatures born of human parentage but not having the shape of human beings—are, it seems, not within this rule. (Co. Litt. 7b.) These are subject to a complete incapacity to own property.

Not only has every individual the capacity to hold property, but every individual has the full capacity to dispose of any property he holds. This is the general rule, and the tendency of the Courts has always been to lean against any practice, custom, or statute which infringes it, whether by making certain interests in property inalienable, as the statute De Donis attempted to make fees tail inalienable (see supra, p. 25), or by imposing a special disability on a particular grantee as regards a particular grant, as by a condition in general restraint of alienation contained in a grant or settlement. (See supra, p. 162.)

There are, however, various exceptions to this rule. These exceptions are of two kinds. The first kind are such as affect individuals as regards specific property.

These we shall call specific disabilities. The other kind are such as affect individuals as regards property generally, or a species of property generally. These may be called general disabilities.

Specific Disabilities.—Specific disabilities are limitations imposed upon particular individuals as to their capacity to acquire or more commonly to alienate particular property. They may arise (a) under a special Act of Parliament; (b) under considerations of public policy; (c) under conditions of settlement.

(a) Act of Parliament.—Sometimes a private Act of Parliament settles a certain estate to accompany a certain title, or as an unbarrable fee tail. In such instances the estate is inalienable, in the sense that the nominal owner of it in fee simple or fee tail is not able to sell the estate for his own benefit. But he can, as life tenant, sell under the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, s. 58).

Sometimes, again, a special Act of Parliament settles Crown lands or lands to be purchased with public funds on a person and his successors in a title of honour. Here the lands are inalienable in the ordinary sense, and in the case of lands purchased with public money, if they be held in tail and the reversion is in the Crown, they are also inalienable under the Settled Land Act (idem).

Again, by several general acts certain pensions granted by the Crown to persons in acknowledgment of or recompense for past services are declared to be inalienable by such persons. In such cases only arrears actually accrued due can be alienated.

(b) Public Policy.—When a salary is granted to a public servant to enable him to discharge the duties of his office, or when a pension is granted to a former servant to support him and keep him in readiness for further services, if required, such salary or pension is inalienable on grounds of public policy. When no public duties are connected with the office, or when, by the terms of the pension, the pensioner cannot be called upon for further services, the salary or pension is alienable. (Grenfell v. Dean of Windsor, 2 Beav. 544.)

Allowances made to married women on separation or divorce from their husbands are also, by the policy of the law, inalienable.

(c) Conditions of Settlement.—A general condition against alienation is, as we have seen, a void condition both at law and in equity. An exception to this rule occurs in the case of settlements upon married women. When property is held by trustees for a married woman's separate use, or even when it is her separate property only by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (In re Lumley, Ex parte Hood-Barrs, (1896) 2 Ch. 690), equity permits, as a further safeguard of her rights, as against the coercion or persuasion of her husband, that her interest in it may be made inalienable. This condition is called a condition against anticipation. Under it the trustees are entitled to pay the income to the married woman only when it has actually accrued due, and any attempt on the woman's part to assign the corpus of the property or the income of it not yet accrued due is void. It is not liable for her debts. The restraint does not apply to income which has accrued due at the time judgment for the debt was recovered (Hood-Barrs v. Heriot, (1896) A. C. 174), but it does apply to income accruing after the date of the judgment (Whiteley v. Edwards, (1896) 2 Q. B. 48). Under sect. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the Court may, where it thinks it is for the benefit of the married woman, remove the restraint on anticipation (see In re Pollard's Settlement, (1896) 1 Ch. 901), and by sect. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, the Court may direct that the costs of proceedings at law initiated by a married woman shall be paid out of her estate, though that is subject to a restraint on anticipation. (See Hood-Barrs v. Heriot, (1897) A. C. 177.)

This condition against anticipation is a specific disability superimposed upon the general disability to which every married woman is, or rather was, subject as to property at common law. It binds the property only during coverture. On death of the husband both the general and the personal disability goes, and the widow is able to dispose freely of the settled property, or rather of her interest in it. But should she not dispose of it, or get it from the trustees into her own hands, on her re-marriage the condition against anticipation will revive along with her general disability, or what now remains of it. (See infra, p. 323, and supra, p. 263.)

Where, however, a grantee or cestui que trust is under no general disability, the only method of preventing alienation is by making his interest come to an end on his attempting to alienate. Thus a gift to trustees for the benefit of B. for life, but in case he attempts to sell his interest or becomes bankrupt, then his interest to determine is good, subject to two conditions. In the first place, such a settlement cannot be made by a man on himself of his own land or goods. The law considers such a proceeding fraudulent and void. In the second place, any settlement of this kind must contain what is called a gift over on the happening of the condition—that is, it is not sufficient to say, on the grantee's attempting to sell or becoming bankrupt, his interest is to cease; words must be put in vesting his interest on that event on someone else.

General Disabilities.—What we have called specific disabilities are commonly regarded not as disabilities proper, but rather as characteristics attaching less to the owner of the property than to the property owned. What we have called general disabilities are commonly considered the only disabilities affecting individuals.

The classes of individuals subject to general disabilities are—(a) infants, (b) married women, (c) lunatics, (d) illegitimate persons, (e) aliens, (f) bankrupts, (g) convicts. A very short notice of each of these classes will be sufficient here, since, in the course of this work, it has been necessary to refer incidentally to most of the disabilities under which they lie.

(a) Infants.—An infant—that is, an individual, male or female, under the full age of twenty-one years—is under no disability as to acquiring property by inheritance. He is under no disability as to acquiring property under a will, providing the acquisition is beneficial in its nature. He may also acquire property by purchase for value, but on coming of age he can repudiate the bargain without assigning cause, unless he induced the vendor to sell by fraudulent misrepresentation as to his age. For this reason a contract to sell is not enforceable against the vendor where the purchaser is an infant.

On the other hand, an infant cannot alien his property. If, however, he does alienate it by deed operating by delivery or by feoffment, or in the case of personalty by sale or delivery, the transaction is not void but only voidable. He cannot contract in such a way as to make himself personally or his property liable for his debts, and any promise after twenty-one to pay debts incurred before that age is void. (Infants' Relief Act, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 62, s. 1.) An infant cannot under any circumstances make a valid will. (Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 7.)

The rule that an infant cannot alienate his property or incur legal debts is subject to exceptions, of which the following are the most important:—

- (a) An infant can incur debts for the supply of necessities. What are necessities to him depends on his fortune and position in life and actual requirements;
- (b) An infant can, under 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 47, s. 11, convey lands merely for the purpose of making a title to them in cases where the lands have to be sold or mortgaged for the payment of debts;

- (c) Under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, s. 1, an infant, if a male over twenty, and if a female over seventeen, may, in contemplation of marriage, make a marriage settlement or contract for a settlement, and every conveyance or assignment executed by the infant with the sanction of the Court will be good;
- (d) An infant tenant in gavelkind can at the age of fifteen alienate by way of sale for value his gavelkind land by feoffment with livery of seisin, evidenced by deed or writing (see In re Maskell and Goldfinch's Contract, (1895) 2 Ch. 525);
- (e) An infant can execute a power of appointment if it clearly appears from the deed creating the power that such was the donor's intention (In re Cardross's Settlement, 7 Ch. D. 728);
- (f) An infant can present to a benefice.

During his minority an infant's property is managed by his guardian (12 Car. II. c. 24), or the trustees of the settlement or will under which the property has come to him. Various powers are given by Act of Parliament to the guardian or trustees besides those given by the will or settlement or under the general law. Thus, by the Infants' Property Act, 1830 (1 Will. IV. c. 65), a guardian can, with the Court's consent, renew or grant leases of the infant's land, and enter into agreements on behalf of the infant. By sect. 60 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the powers given by that act to a life tenant (see supra, p. 60) may, when the life tenant is an infant, be exercised by the trustees of the settlement, or, if there be none, by persons appointed by the Court on the application of the infant's guardian or next friend.

(b) Married Women.—We have already, in treating of marriage as a mode of acquiring property (see supra, p. 262), said nearly all that is necessary as to married women's past and present position as to property. We will now merely give an outline of the development of the law on the subject.

At common law the theory was that by marriage the wife's identity became merged in that of the husband, and this theory was rigorously carried out in regard to her property. As we have seen, marriage vested, during the continuance of the coverture, all the rights and obligations of the wife as to her freeholds, leaseholds, goods and choses in action, in the husband; and as goods are capable only of absolute ownership, this had the effect of vesting these absolutely in him, while his interest in the other kinds of property was temporary only. (See supra, p. 263.) As to all, however, for the time being, the husband and he alone had any rights or obligations, and he alone could acquire any rights or incur any obligations. The wife could not bring an action to defend the property, neither could she contract a debt to bind it. She could during the coverture only contract debts as the agent of her husband, and for all torts committed by her during the coverture the husband was and still is liable. (Seroka v. Kattenberg, 17 Q. B. D. 177.) He was also liable for her pre-nuptial debts, that is, the debts she was subject to at the time of her marriage.

As to alienation, the husband was entitled to alienate without the wife's consent her leaseholds and choses in action; but he could not alienate her freeholds. These could only be alienated by the wife with the concurrence of her husband, who had to join in the deed. And the deed had to be acknowledged by the wife before a judge of the superior courts or of a county court, or before two commissioners (now one) for taking acknowledgments of married women, who examined her apart from her husband as to her knowledge and desires as to what she was doing. (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, ss. 77, 79 and 80; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 42, s. 184; and Conveyancing Act, 1882, s. 7.)

Equity altered this state of the law by permitting trustees to hold property for the use of a married woman independently of her husband. This is what is called a trust for the wife's separate use. When property is so held, the wife is entitled to it practically as if she were unmarried or a feme sole. She could alienate it inter vivos, bind it by her contracts, and devise or bequeath it by her will. Equity, however, permitted her to be deprived of the first two of these powers by a condition against anticipation in the settlement. (See supra, p. 320.)

Equity interfered with the common law view in another way. When the wife, or the husband in right of the wife, became entitled to property which was recoverable only in equity—such as a legacy—or which was the subject of a suit in equity, the Court, on the application of the wife, would refuse to permit the husband to receive the property until he agreed to settle a portion of it, as approved by the Court, upon the wife and the children of the marriage. This right of the wife was called her equity to a settlement. (Lady Elibank v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737; 1 W. & T.)

This state of the law was altered by the Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), and certain other statutes which gave protection to a wife's property as against her husband under certain conditions and circumstances. But most of these were repealed or superseded by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75). As before stated, the effect of that act has practically been to make all the property of women married since 31st December, 1882, and all the property accruing since that date to women married before it, the wife's separate estate without the necessity of a settlement. It does not, however, interfere with the law of settlement as established before its enactment (sect. 19), and as to the property accrued before 31st December, 1882, to women married before it, the old law still prevails.

Property accruing to married women before 1883, means accruing either in possession or in title. Accordingly, a reversionary interest which accrued in title before 1883, but which fell in since then, is not separate estate within the act. And, accordingly, as to it, the old law as to the wife's equity to a settlement and as to its alienation if freehold by separately acknowledged deed, still prevails. (Reid v. Reid, 31 Ch. D. 402.)

As regards her statutory separate estate, a married woman is practically under no disability now. She can sell it, leave it by will, bind it by her contracts, and sue and be sued as to it precisely as if she were a feme sole. Indeed, as regards her separate estate, coverture is no longer a disability within the statute of limitations. (Weldon v. Neal, 51 L. T. 289.) In many other respects the act has increased the legal capacity of married women. Thus, they can, without their husbands joining or being joined as co-plaintiffs or co-defendants, sue for and are liable for torts. (The husband, if sued jointly with his wife, still remains liable for her torts.) If they trade separately from their husbands they are liable to be made bankrupt. (Sect. 1.) They cannot, however, bind themselves personally for their debts under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62); the creditors' sole remedy is against their estates (Scott v. Morley, 20 Q. B. D. 120), though they can now contract without having at the time of contracting any separate estate which they can bind, or any separate estate whatever. (Married Women's Property Act, 1893, sect. 1 (a) (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63).) They may act without their husbands' consent as executrices or trustees. (Sect. 18, Married Women's Property Act, 1882.) A husband, however, is no longer liable on his wife's contracts, save when she contracts as his agent, nor for her liabilities as executrix or trustee, nor for her pre-nuptial debts or torts, save to the extent of the property he may have received through her. (Sect. 13.) And the wife's property remains liable for these last in spite of any condition against anticipation imposed upon it at her subsequent marriage. (Pelton Brothers v. Harrison, (1891) 2 Q. B. 422.)

(c) Lunatics.—The will of a person lunatic, idiot or otherwise of unsound mind—as in consequence of extreme age—is absolutely void. (Smith v. Tebbett, L. R. 1 P. & M. 398.) The conveyance of such a person is voidable, unless the other party to it was unaware and took no unfair advantage of his lunacy. The rule as to conveyances applies to purchases by a lunatic, and every other form of executed contract. (Beavan v. McDonnell, 23 L. J. Ex. 94; Drew v. Nunn, 4 Q. B. D. 661.) A will or conveyance made by a lunatic during a lucid interval is perfectly valid.

The powers of the Court in Lunacy are now set out in the Lunacy Act, 1890 (as amended by 54 & 55 Vict. c. 65), which repeals and consolidates many earlier statutes. This act does not extend to Ireland. The jurisdiction over lunatics in Ireland is in the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and is practically co-extensive with that possessed by the Court of Lunacy in England. (34 & 35 Vict. c. 22.)

Lunatics are either lunatics so found by inquisition or lunatics not so found. When a lunatic is so found a guardian of his person and property—called his committee—is appointed by the Lord Chancellor or Lord Justices having jurisdiction in lunacy. This committee, who is an officer of the Court in Lunacy, manages the lunatic's property subject to the sanction of the Court. (See Part IV., Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5).) The rule in so managing it is to regard only the lunatic's interest and that of his family, but, subject to this, not unnecessarily to alter the nature of the property so as to affect the respective rights of his heir or next of kin on his death—as by selling realty belonging to him or investing his personalty in realty. (Oxendon v. Compton, 2 Ves. jun. 72.)

As has already been pointed out, when a lunatic is protector of a settlement, his committee with the sanction of the Court in Lunacy, can consent for him to bar the entail (see supra, p. 41); and under the Settled Land Act, 1882, when the life tenant is a lunatic, the powers given him by the act may be exercised by his committee under the order of the Lord Chancellor or other judges having jurisdiction in lunacy. (Sect. 62.)

As to lunatics not so found, the Court in Lunacy has no jurisdiction independent of statute. (Re Wilton, 2 C. P. Coop., temp. Lord Cottenham, 208.) Now, however, by sect. 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, the provisions of that act apply to the case of lunatics not so found, in all cases where it is proved to the satisfaction of the judge in lunacy that a person not found lunatic is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own affairs, and that his property does not extend in value 2,000*l.* or that the income thereof does not exceed 100*l.* per annum. Where a lunatic's fortune exceeds these limits, the only mode of bringing him within the jurisdiction of the Court is by a proceeding de inquirendo lunatico.

(d) Illegitimate Persons.—As has already been pointed out, persons not born in lawful wedlock are, in law, nullius filii, the children of nobody. They are accordingly incapable of acquiring by inheritance or intestate succession from their parents or any person related to them through their parents. The only relatives they can have whom the law will recognize as relatives are their descendants, to whom they may succeed as heirs-at-law or next of kin. (See supra, p. 27.)

It may be added that the illegitimate children of a person not being regarded by the law as his or her children, they will not be included in a bequest or devise to that person's children, unless the person in question to the knowledge of the testator was dead, (or, if a woman, past child-bearing) having had only illegitimate children (In re Homer, Eagleton v. Homer, 37 Ch. D. 695), or unless the illegitimate children are identified by a sufficient description. (See In re Fish, Ingham v. Rayner, (1894) 2 Ch. 83.)

(e) Aliens.—Formerly aliens—that is, persons born out of the ligeance of the Queen (7 Co. 16a., Calvin's case)—were subject to many disabilities, more especially with regard to the ownership of land. These, however, have been abolished by sect. 2 of the Naturalization Act, 1870 (33 Vict. c. 14), which gives an alien the same capacity as a subject of the Queen as to the ownership of all kinds of property. This general provision, however, is limited by sect. 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), which denies to aliens the capacity to own any share in a British ship. (See Appendix D.)

(f) Bankrupts.—As long as a bankrupt remains undischarged from his bankruptcy, he cannot hold property as against his trustee in bankruptcy. (Supra, p. 250.) All that he acquires and all that accrues to him may be claimed by the trustee. But, until the trustee claims it, every person dealing with the bankrupt honestly can acquire from him a title to such after-acquired property which will be good against the trustee. (Cohen v. Mitchell, 25 Q. B. D. 262.) This rule, however, does not apply to pure realty (In re New Land Development Association and Gray, (1892) 2 Ch. 138), though apparently it does apply to leaseholds. (In re Clayton and Barclay's Contract, (1895) 2 Ch. 212.)

(g) Convicts.—The act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23) which abolished forfeiture on a conviction for felony (see supra, p. 260), deprives a person so convicted of the control of his property during the term of his imprisonment. A convict's property now vests in an administrator, who has full powers to alienate or charge it and to cause payment or satisfaction of any debts or liabilities of the convict, or claims for maintenance on the part of those dependent on him, to be made out of it. On completion of sentence the property reverts to the convict.

SECTION II.

ARTIFICIAL PERSONS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Corporations	330	Charities	332

Corporations.—Artificial persons are, as we have seen, a number of individuals or a succession of single individuals treated by the law as a single person or unit. (See supra, p. 101.) When they are so treated they are said to be incorporated, and are called corporations. When they consist of a number of individuals at the same time, they are corporations aggregate; when they consist of a succession of individuals, one at a time, they are corporations sole. Both corporations aggregate and corporations sole have perpetual succession, that is, though the corporators may die, the corporation itself never dies, the corporations aggregate having inherent powers to replace those corporators who drop off; while, in the case of a corporation sole, when the sole corporator dies, his successor, whether by inheritance or appointment, succeeds, as from his predecessor's death, to all his predecessor's rights and liabilities without any conveyance or assignment of these.

Now as to land, a corporation aggregate or sole has the capacity to acquire it, and it has that capacity owing to its being a corporation. (Sutton's Hospital, 10 Rep. 30b.) A grant of land in severalty could not be made to a group of individuals unless this group was incorporated. Neither could a fee simple be conveyed to a single person and his successors in a certain office or position unless the holder of that office or position and his successors constituted a corporation sole. (See supra, p. 28.) But while incorporation is necessary to give a group of individuals or a succession of individuals (not by way of inheritance) the capacity to hold land, by common law a corporation cannot exercise that capacity until it has the licence of the Crown to do so. (Co. Litt. 2.)

The reason of this doctrine of the common law was that the lords of whom land was held were deprived of some of their most valuable rights by the alienation of their land to a corporation, since, owing to a corporation never dying, there were no descents from one owner to another, and, consequently, no reliefs, and owing to its never being under age, there were no wardships, and owing to its not being an individual, there were no marriages. For these reasons, alienation to a corporation was called alienation in mortmain (dead hand).

Numbers of statutes were passed to strengthen the powers of the common law to prevent alienations in mortmain. These have been repealed by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), and the law is now consolidated in that statute. By sect. 1, there is to be forfeiture to the superior lord of whom the land is held, or if there be no such lord, to the Crown if land be conveyed to a corporation in mortmain, unless the corporation has authority to hold land given to it by licence of the Crown or by an Act of Parliament for the time being in force. By sect. 2, the Queen has power to grant a licence to hold land to any corporation.

Most corporations established by Act of Parliament have power to hold such land as may be needed for the purposes for which they were established. Companies registered under the Companies Act, 1862, if their object be gain for their members, have full capacity to hold land; if their object be not gain, they are not entitled to hold land exceeding in extent two acres without the sanction of the Board of Trade. (Sect. 21.)

When land is held in fee simple by a corporation, on the dissolution of the corporation there is no escheat at common law; the land reverts to the grantor or his heirs. It would seem that as the grantor, then, in granting a fee simple to a corporation, does not give up all interest in the land, a condition against alienation by the grantee is valid. (See Challis's Real Prop., 198, 199.)

As to goods, a corporation aggregate has at common law full capacity to acquire and to hold them. A corporation sole, on the other hand, has no such capacity at common law. (Bl. Com. 1, p. 477.) Goods can be settled for the benefit of a corporation sole only by means of a trust, an assignment to the corporator sole and his successors vesting the complete ownership in the corporator himself. An exception seems to occur in the case of the Crown, the state jewels and plate being held by the sovereign for the time being merely for his or her life. Probably, however, these are to be considered as heirlooms. (See Hargrave's note, Co. Litt. 9.) And power to hold goods may be and frequently is given to corporations sole created by Act of Parliament.

Charities.—Closely allied to alienations in mortmain are alienations to charitable uses. These, strictly speaking, are not logically part of our present subject, since the limitations imposed by statute on gifts to charities are not disabilities of persons who take under the gifts, but rather restrictions as to objects for which gifts may be made. These limitations apply equally, whether the donees to whom the gifts for charitable purposes are made are corporations or individuals. Yet the law as to corporations and as to charitable uses is so similar and so intermixed, that it is convenient to treat of both under the one heading.

The law as to charitable uses, which was the creation of many statutes, chief among which was the so-called Mortmain Act, 1736 (9 Geo. II. c. 36), is now consolidated and amended by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Acts, 1888, 1891 and 1892 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 73; and 55 Vict. c. 11). Charitable uses within these acts are defined by sect. 13 (2) of the principal act (1888), which is a re-enactment of the preamble of 43 Eliz. c. 4 (Irish Act, 10 Car. I. sess. 3, c. 1), which statute, with most other acts affecting charities, is repealed. The Mortmain Act, 1736, did not extend to Ireland, nor do the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Acts, 1888-92.

The provisions of the principal act, like those of the Mortmain Act, apply only to assurances of land, or of money to be laid out in land for charitable uses. These assurances may be validly made, subject to certain conditions laid down in Part II. of the act. The chief of these conditions are that the assurance is to take effect at once, is to be without power of revocation, reservation or condition, save as permitted therein, and is, if it be of land or personal estate not being stock in the public funds, executed before two witnesses, not less than twelve months before the assurator's death, and registered within six months of execution at the Central Office of the Supreme Court. The provision as to execution before witnesses does not apply in case the assurance is bond fide for full and valuable consideration, which consideration, by the way, may take the form wholly or partly of a rent reserved by the assurance. If the property transferred be stock in the public funds, the assurance, unless it be made for full and valuable consideration, must be by transfer at least six months before the death of the assurator. (Sect. 4.) Provision is made for validation of the assurance by subsequent registration, where registration within the proper time was omitted by inadvertence. (Sect. 5.)

Under Part III. of the act are certain exemptions from the provisions of Part II. and also of Part I.—referring to alienations in mortmain—where these assurances are for certain objects. Under this Part, assurances by deed of land of any quantity, and by will of land of the quantities therein stated, may be made for the purposes of a public park, school-house for an elementary school, or museum, provided such assurance, if by deed and not for full and valuable consideration, or, if by will, was executed at least twelve months before the assurator's death, or is a substantial reproduction of a devise in a will made twelve months before the assurator's death, and is enrolled within six months from its execution, if a deed, or the death of the assurator, if a will. The maximum quantity of land devisable for a public park is twenty acres; for a school-house, two; for a museum, one. (Sect. 6.) By the amending Act of 1892, these provisions—all save that requiring execution of the assurance twelve months before the assurator's death—are extended to any assurance by deed to a local authority for any purpose for which such local authority is empowered by Act of Parliament to acquire land. By sect. 7, Part II. of the principal act is not to apply to assurances of land, or money to be laid out in the purchase of land, to or to the use of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Durham, and Victoria, or the colleges of these; or in trust for the colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster, or in trust for Keble College; or to assurances to trustees on behalf of associations for religious purposes, or for the promotion of education, art, literature, or science, of not more than two acres of land on which to erect a building for the purposes of the association.

Part II. of the principal act does not refer to assurances for charitable uses by will. The law as to these is now contained in the amending Act of 1891, the effect of which is, as we have already seen, to give power free from all restrictions to leave land, or money to be laid out in land, to charities; land so left, however, is to be sold within a year, and money left to be laid out in land is not to be so laid out. (See supra, p. 241; In re Bridger, (1894) 1 Ch. 297.) This act does not, it would appear, repeal the provisions of Part II., which still apply to assurances otherwise than by will, and it expressly preserves the exemptions as to land devised for the purposes of a public park, school, or museum contained in Part III. The Act of 1891 is not to be read along with the principal act, and its object is altogether different. The Act of 1888 was intended to regulate the conditions under which land might be alienated to charities or in mortmain ; the Act of 1891 was intended to prevent alienations in mortmain while permitting charities to benefit by the intentions of testators. (In re Hume, Forbes v. Hume, (1895) 1 Ch. 422.)

As has been said, the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Acts do not apply to Ireland, nor did the preceding acts repealed by them. The law there is regulated by the Charitable Donations and Bequests (Ireland) Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 97). By section 16 of that act no donation, devise or bequest for pious or charitable uses shall be valid to create or convey any estate in lands for such uses unless the deed, will, or other instrument containing the same shall be executed three months at least before the death of the person executing the same, and unless every such deed or instrument, not being a will, be registered within three months of its execution.

APPENDIX A.

COPYHOLDS.

COPYHOLD tenure has already been mentioned in Part II., p. 21, supra. It is proposed here to treat briefly of its origin, nature, and incidents, and of the means provided by recent legislation for enlarging it into freehold tenure. The course of English law in this matter is plain. The copyholder was originally a villein holding land merely at the will of his lord, and obliged to perform various "base services." Custom gradually fixes those services, and provides that the villein and his descendants shall remain in possession of the land so long as they perform the services thus fixed. This custom is at first recognized only in the manorial court to which the villein is subject; gradually the common law comes to recognize and enforce it, and the villein thus becomes a copyholder, with a legal interest in his land, of which he can dispose. Finally, modern legislation provides means by which the copyholder can free himself from the services, and acquire a freehold interest in his land.

I. First, then, as to the origin and history of copyhold tenure. For this we must go back even before the Conquest. All copyholds are some parcel of a manor; and although this name is of Norman origin, and though the relation of a lord of a manor to his tenants was developed and strictly defined by the Norman feudal lawyers, yet the manorial system is distinctly traceable to the old Teutonic "mark-system," which gave the Anglo-Saxon township.¹ Even before the Conquest these townships were tending to become manors, by forming part of the lands of a lord; and the Conquest did but change Saxon lords for Norman, and define the relation of lord and tenant on more strictly feudal principles. Confining ourselves to the manor as existing in Norman times, we may describe it as a district of lands, holden by a lord, and by tenants under him, over which lands and tenants he exercises certain rights, including rights of jurisdiction. The lands forming a manor were (a) demesne lands, which comprised lands in the lord's own occupation, and waste lands over which the tenants of the manor had generally rights of common, (b) tenemental lands, i.e., lands granted to free tenants in consideration of rents and free services, which tenants are now represented by the freeholders of the manor, and (c) the villanagium, or lands occupied by villeins or serfs, from whom the present copyholders or customary tenants have sprung. (See Pollock and Maitland, Hist. Eng. Law, vol. 1, p. 345.) The freehold tenants owed, as one of their services, attendance in the court of the manor, called the Court Baron, in which they were the judges, the pares curiæ, and the lord or his steward the president. There are thus three essentials of a manor: (a) demesne lands, allotted as described above, and including the villanagium; (b) a court-baron; (c) free tenants in fee, holding of the lord by services, which include attendance on this court.¹

¹ See on this Stubb's Const. Hist., vol. i. pp. 49—52; Digby's Hist. Real. Prop., pp. 4—8, 43—50.

It is with the villeins, to whom the lord granted portions of his demesne, that we are particularly concerned. They were the non-free tenants of the manor, villani adscripti glebæ, or, in Norman phrase, villeins regardant, i.e., villeins attached to the soil. Such land as they had they held merely at the will of the lord, to whom they rendered "base services," usually in the cultivation of his lands. The criterion of villein tenure seems at first to have been the uncertainty of the service which the villein might be called on to perform; as the phrase went, he did not know in the evening what he should have to do on the morrow. But the custom gradually came to fix the services which a lord could demand from his villeins. In fact, it was to the lord's advantage to continue them in possession of their lands, so long as they performed their services; and he could derive profit from allowing them to dispose of those lands to their children after them, or to strangers, in consideration of a payment made to the lord. Thus there grew up in manors various customs giving the villeins virtually estates of inheritance in their lands and a modified power of alienation; that is, they came to have what we may call a morally-sanctioned interest in their lands, known as villanagium.² At first, the only court to take cognizance of this interest was the manorial court. The villeins attended it not as members, but as suitors; its decisions, based on the custom of the manor, regulated their dealings with their lands, the services which they were to render, the payments to be made to the lord; its rolls recorded all these decisions and proceedings; and hence the rolls of the manorial court formed the evidence of the manorial customs, while a copy of an entry on the roll relating to a tenant was his title-deed. So common and regular grew these proceedings that they came to be recognized by the King's Courts; the customs of the manors acquired legal validity; and thus, by the time of Edward IV. (Littleton, c. 9, s. 73), the villein regardant had become a copyholder, with rights which he could assert even against his lord. Henceforth the modern definition of copyholds applies—"estates in some parcel of a manor, founded on the lord's grant and tenant's admittance enrolled in the customary court, amounting in law, apart from the custom, to mere tenancies at will, but where the custom comes into question, having a more permanent character." (Elton on Copyholds, p. 2.)

¹ See Maine's Village Communities, p. 133.

² Villanagium had previously meant "land occupied by villeins"; it came to mean "a villein's interest in his lands." See further on the subject of villein services, Pollock and Maitland Hist. Eng. Law, vol. 1, p. 354.

II. The Nature and Incidents of Copyhold Tenure. Copyhold tenure, or tenure by copy of court roll, is a customary tenure, i. e., its incidents are fixed by custom. Such custom is of two kinds: (a) the general custom of copyholds, now forming a part of the common law, of which the Court will take judicial notice; and (b) special customs, prevailing in particular manors, which Sir George Jessel has called "local common law." These latter customs must be strictly pleaded and proved; and the essentials to the validity of such a custom are its being local, certain, reasonable, and continuous. The incidents of copyhold tenure may thus vary somewhat in different manors, but its main features are constant, and are briefly as follows:—

The freehold and seisin of the lands are in the lord, the tenant having a customary interest and possession. (Eardley v. Granville, 3 Ch. D. 826.) The extent of the tenant's customary estate is regulated by the custom of the particular manor. Generally, estates can subsist in copyholds, analogous to freehold estates for life or in fee; an estate tail in copyholds can subsist only in a manor where a particular custom permits of it, and in the absence of such a custom, an attempt to entail copyholds creates a fee-simple conditional. (Heydon's Case, 3 Rep. 7a.) The descent of copyhold lands is governed by the custom of the manor wherein they are situate, and, in the absence of special custom, by the common law rules. The most usual incidents of copyhold are the following:—

(a) Freebench. This is the interest of a widow in her husband's copyholds; and it is to be noted that the Dower Act, 1834 (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105) does not apply to copyholds. Its extent depends upon the custom, and it is not always the third which a dowress took at common law.

(b) Like this is the customary curtesy, the widower's estate in his late wife's copyholds. Here the custom is usually, but not always, the same as at common law.

(c) Fines. These are payments due to the lord on various occasions fixed by custom. The most usual are on the death of the lord, on a change of the tenant, on a licence empowering the tenant to aliene. Fines are either fixed or arbitrary, but, if arbitrary, they must be reasonable. (Willowes' Case, 13 Rep. 1.)

(d) Other services due from the tenant. Of these fealty and suit of court are universal; another common service is the payment of heriots, usually on the death of a copyholder. (Damerell v. Protheroe, 10 Q. B. 20.) Rent also is sometimes due.

(e) Rights of Common. Copyholders are often entitled to exercise commonable rights over the waste of the manor. (See supra, p. 281.)

(f) Escheat and forfeiture. Generally, the estate of a copyholder escheats to the lord on the tenant's death intestate and without customary heirs. The estate is forfeited to the lord on the tenant's doing any wrongful act to the lord's prejudice, e.g., anything amounting to a determination of his tenancy without the lord's consent; by failure to perform the due services; by committing either voluntary or permissive waste, unless a custom allows waste. If the heir or devisee of a deceased copyholder does not claim to be admitted, after due proclamation, the lord can seize the lands quousque, i.e., until a claimant appear. (Doe v. Hellier, 3 T. R. 162.)

III. Mode of Alienation of Copyholds: (1) inter vivos; (2) by will.

1. A copyholder could not use the common law forms of conveyance, for, being in the eye of the common law a tenant at will, he had, strictly speaking, no estate to convey. What he could do was to surrender his interest to the lord, praying him to admit to possession of it the person to whom he (the tenant) wished to transfer it. This surrender was made in the manorial court. It was customary for the lord to admit the alienee, on payment of the usual fine; and this custom grew so strong that the lord was considered bound by a trust to admit the person designated by the surrenderor.¹ This trust would, in mediæval times, have been enforced by the Chancellor (Spence, Equitable Jurisdict., vol. 1, p. 648); in modern times, it would be enforced by a common law court by mandamus. Thus the legally recognized mode of conveying copyholds is by surrender and admittance. The essential of a surrender is the giving up of the customary seisin to the lord, who can then only refuse to carry out the admittance if the conveyance is improper in form or prejudicial to his interest, e.g., he can refuse to admit a corporation, since, as it is immortal, he would lose the fines payable on death. The person who can surrender is the person who could convey the land, if freehold, by an ordinary assurance. A copy of the record of this surrender and admittance on the court rolls is delivered to the new tenant, and is his muniment of title. The process need not be gone through in the Court; a surrender may be made out of Court to the steward or his deputy, and the vendor's solicitor is usually appointed deputy steward for the time being, in order to take his surrender. The admittee can now be admitted by his attorney, appointed for that purpose orally or in writing. (Copyhold Act, 1894, sect. 83.) A tenant for life, under the Settled Land Act, 1882, can, in exercising the powers of that Act, convey by deed settled copyholds vested in trustees for him, which deed is entered on the rolls, and the grantee is then entitled to admittance without any surrender. (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, s. 28 (3).)

¹ It may be useful to compare this with the "Ulster custom," as to alienation of a tenant's interest in Ireland, p. 344, infra, but in the case of the Ulster custom there seems to have been no actual trust binding the landlord.

A mortgage of copyholds is effected by a covenant to surrender them conditionally, followed by a surrender conditioned to become void on payment of the debt and interest. This is entered on the rolls, and on the mortgage being paid off, the mortgagee executes a warrant to the steward to enter satisfaction of the conditional surrender. When satisfaction is thus entered, it has the effect of the re-conveyance in an ordinary mortgage of freeholds.

2. Originally, copyholds were not devisable. The copyholder made a surrender to the uses of his will, which then operated merely as a declaration of those uses. An Act of 55 Geo. III. c. 192, made devises of copyholds not surrendered to the uses of the testator's will as valid as if they had been so surrendered. And the Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26, s. 2) made copyholds freely devisable by wills made or republished after its date. The estate vests in the customary heir until the devisee is admitted. (Garland v. Mead, L. R. 6 Q. B. 441.)

IV. Change of Copyhold Lands into Freehold. There are two ways in which copyhold land may cease to be held "according to the custom of the manor": (1) by extinguishment; (2) by enfranchisement.

1. Extinguishment occurs when the freehold and copyhold interest in the same land and in the same right are united in one person. Thus, if the copyholder surrenders his land, to the use of the lord, or without declaring any use; or, if the lord conveys the land to the copyholder for an estate of freehold, or even a term of years, the copyhold is merged and extinguished in the freehold. But if the lord acquires the land by descent, forfeiture, escheat, &c., and there is no act on his part showing an intention to destroy the copyhold tenure, it is only suspended, so long as he does not alter the demisable nature of the tenement, and on a re-grant by him the land is still copyhold. (See sect. 81, Copyhold Act, 1894.)

2. Enfranchisement may take place (a) at common law, or (b) under statute. It is the conversion of the copyhold estate in the hands of the tenant into an estate of freehold.

(a.) At common law it is effected by an agreement between the lord and tenant, and then avails only to the extent of the lord's interest; if he has, e.g., an estate for life, such voluntary enfranchisement would not be complete as against the remainderman.

(b.) By statute. A series of Acts known as the Copyhold Acts of 1841, 1843, 1844, 1852, 1858, and 1887, have provided means by which either lord or tenant could procure enfranchisement of the lands. These Acts have now been consolidated in the Copyhold Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 46).

This statutory enfranchisement may be voluntary or compulsory. Voluntary enfranchisement is effected by agreement between the lord and tenant, with the consent of the Copyhold Commissioners (now the Board of Agriculture), followed by a conveyance from the lord to the tenant with their consent; and it is complete, even though the lord have only a limited interest, if proper notice be given to the remaindermen or reversioners. (Part II. Copyhold Act.) Compulsory enfranchisement may be compelled by either lord or tenant. (Sect. 1.) The consideration is ascertained by a valuation of the lands, either by valuers appointed by the parties, or by the Board of Agriculture, if the parties cannot agree upon it. (Sect. 5.) An award of the Board, in pursuance of this valuation, has, when finally confirmed, the effect of a conveyance. (Sect. 10.) The effect of enfranchisement, as has been said, is that the lands become of freehold tenure and subject to the common law rules; but the lord's rights as to escheat for want of heirs, and the tenant's rights of common are preserved. (Sect. 21.) A copyhold tenant is now entitled, on succeeding to his estate, to a written notice from the lord, setting out the tenant's right to compel enfranchisement on payment of the compensation to the lord and the fees to the steward of the manor, as ascertained under the Copyhold Act. (Sect. 42.) The compensation and fees may, in certain cases, be charged on the land enfranchised by a certificate of the Board of Agriculture—which certificate will then be transferable by endorsement (sect. 41), or by deed executed by the owner of the enfranchised land. (Sect. 36.)

APPENDIX B.

THE IRISH LAND ACTS.

WE have just seen how a tenancy which was at first merely to continue as long and on such conditions as the landowner pleased, gradually became a permanent tenancy at fixed services; how from being a permanent tenancy it became by custom, enforced by the King's Courts as law, an hereditary estate in the land subject to certain rights and payments due to the original owner; how, when this state of affairs had long been established, Parliament interfered to put an end to the double ownership of the land, and did so by conferring on the tenant the right to buy out compulsorily the original owner, and become himself the nominal as well as the real owner of the land.

The earlier stages of this process were accomplished without the aid of express legislation, by the natural growth of general practice into law. It was consequently a slow process—the work of centuries. We come now to the consideration of a similar development, in modern times and by modern methods. We shall see how a state of affairs not very unlike that which originally prevailed in what are now copyhold lands was in a single generation changed somewhat as copyhold was changed by a series of Acts of Parliament, beginning with the Irish Land Act of 1870, and reaching its completion—in substance at any rate—in the Land Purchase Act of 1891.

The object common to the series of acts passed during the last thirty years, which is sometimes called the Irish land code, is the extension of the common law rights of agricultural tenants in Ireland. Those rights, in the absence of special customs, had been governed since the time of James I. by the English common law rules; but the conditions actually prevailing in the two countries were widely different. Ireland was a country of small holdings, the tenant's legal interest in which was capable of speedy determination, for the great majority held under yearly tenancies. But in practice, tenants and their families were often allowed to continue so long in occupation of their holdings that they came to have a sort of customary right to the occupation; and in parts of the country custom allowed the tenant to deal with this privilege of occupancy by way of sale.¹ Moreover, it was an almost universal practice that improvements to the holding were made by the tenant, not the landlord; yet these by the common law rules became the property of the landlord, who was under no legal obligation to compensate the tenant for them on ejecting him from his holding. To remedy this state of things; to legalize the customs referred to as favourable to the tenant, among which the Ulster custom was chief; to put all tenants of agricultural holdings on a similar footing to those subject to those customs; to make permanent a tenant's interest in his holding, and enable him to have the fair rent for his holding judicially determined; and finally, to assist tenants in purchasing their holdings from their landlords—these were the intentions of the Irish Land Acts of 1870, 1881, 1887, and 1896, and of the Land Purchase Acts of 1885 and 1891.

I. It will be well to preface a summary of these by some notice of the Irish Landlord and Tenant Act, 1860 (Deasy's Act). This consolidates the existing law of landlord and tenant, and makes some important changes in procedure; and it creates one of the radical differences between English and Irish law on this subject, viz., that the relationship of landlord and tenant is in Ireland henceforth based, not on tenure, but on contract. (Sect. 3.) The act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 154) may be divided as follows:—

1. The formation, and certain incidents, of the contract of tenancy, which is declared to exist whenever one party agrees to hold land from or under another in consideration of rent. It may be express or implied from the conduct of the parties—payment of rent being evidence, but not irrebutable evidence, of a contract of tenancy. (Hurly v. Hanrahan, I. R. 1 O. L. 715.) If express, and for a greater period than from year to year, it must be made either by deed, or by writing signed by the landlord, or his agent authorized in writing. (Sect. 4.) The main incidents treated of are: (a) fixtures and emblements.

¹ Compare the statement of Bewley, J. (Markey v. Lord Gosford, 31 I. L. T. R. 97): "Prior to the passing of the Act of 1870, the tenant of a holding subject to the Ulster custom claimed to have an interest in his holding over and above his mere legal tenancy, and although this interest had no legal sanction it was almost universally recognized. The tenant was regarded as an owner and not a mere hirer of land, and the farm was considered to be fully as much a part of the family property of the tenant as the reversion was of the family property of the landlord."

A tenant, if there be no contrary agreement, may remove his fixtures during the tenancy, or within two months of its determination by an uncertain event. (Sect. 17.) And on such a determination of his tenancy, he may, in lieu of his right to emblements, continue his occupation till the end of the current year of his tenancy. (Sect. 34.) (b) As to waste; sects. 26—31 deal with certain acts in the nature of waste, and the tenant's rights as to committing them; and a summary jurisdiction to prevent waste is given to justices of the peace. (Sects. 35—37.) (c) As to covenants implied in the contract: on the landlord's part, absolute covenants for title and for quiet enjoyment (sect. 41); on the tenant's part, covenants to pay rent, keep in repair and so deliver up the premises, subject to a right of surrender in case of their accidental destruction. (Sect. 42.)

2. Surrenders and assignments by tenants. These may be made either by deed or by note in writing (sects. 7, 9), or may take place by operation of law. If there be an agreement in writing prohibiting assignment or sub-letting, any assignment or sub-letting without the landlord's written consent is absolutely void (sects. 10, 18), and passes no interest to the assignee or sub-tenant, not even an interest by estoppel against the assignor himself. (Gillman v. Murphy, 1 R. 6 C. L. 34.) However, an act of 51 & 52 Vict. c. 13, s. 1, in cases of the assignee applying to have a fair rent fixed, allows the landlord's consent to the assignment to be established by any evidence satisfactory to the Court. And sect. 11 of the Land Act, 1896, provides, with reference to sub-lettings without consent, that on an application by the sub-tenant to have a fair rent fixed, proof that the landlord knew of the sub-letting and took no steps to enforce his contract shall be sufficient proof of his consent.

3. Procedure. Sects. 45—102 deal with actions for rent and actions of ejectment. We need only note that under sects. 70, 71, a tenant who has had a decree given against him in an action of ejectment may be restored to his holding on applying to the Court within six months, and paying the rent with arrears and costs. (And see sect. 7, Land Act, 1887.) Further, if the tenancy be one to which the Land Acts apply, the tenant may redeem it by the payment of two years' rent (whatever be the amount of rent due), and the landlord can recover the remainder of the arrears as a debt due by the tenant, but not by ejectment or distress. (Sect. 16, Land Act, 1896.)

II. The first of the Land Acts proper is the Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 46). This, which, like the succeeding act, applies only to agricultural and pastoral tenancies, was the first to recognize an occupation interest in land. It legalized the Ulster custom and similar usages; and it gave tenants not subject to these a right, on quitting their holding, to be compensated for their improvements, and to be compensated for "disturbance" in their holding by act of the landlord. Its main provisions may be summarized under these heads:—

1. Legal force given to customs formerly not enforceable at law, a number of varying usages which had long existed, chiefly in Ulster, permitting a tenant to deal with his interest. Sects. 1, 2 of the act now declare this Ulster custom and similar usages legal, and enforceable in manner provided by the act. The essential elements in such a custom have been judicially said to be:—(a) the tenant's right to sell his interest; (b) to have the purchaser recognized by the landlord, if there be no reasonable objection to him; (c) and to have his tenancy transferred to such purchaser. (Per Porter, M.R., M'Elroy v. Brooke, 16 L. R. Ir. 74.) To these may be added (d) the right of a tenant to continue in undisturbed possession so long as he pays his rent. The sections also provide that a landlord may purchase this custom from the tenant, and it then ceases to attach to the holding.

2. Compensation for disturbance. Sect. 3 provides that a tenant, not entitled under the foregoing customs, shall be entitled to such compensation from the landlord, if "disturbed" by him, as the Court shall think just. "Disturbance" is not defined; but a tenant may claim compensation as soon as he has been served by his landlord with a notice to quit or an ejectment; it would seem that the Court would decide on the facts of each case whether a disturbance had taken place. (Fitzsimons v. Clive, 12 I. L. T. R. 12.)

3. Compensation for improvements. Sect. 4 enacts that a tenant, not claiming under the customs, may, on quitting his holding, or being ejected for non-payment of rent, claim compensation for improvements made by him or his predecessors in title, except in certain specified cases. "Predecessors in title" means not necessarily predecessors in the same title, but "those who have transmitted to one another their respective tenancies or titles to the possession of a holding, whatever those tenancies or titles may be." (Adams v. Dunseath, 10 L. R. Ir. 109.) Contracts not to improve the holding, or not to claim for improvements, are declared void. Sect. 70 defines "improvements" as (a) works adding to the land's letting value, and (b) unexhausted tillages, manures, and like farming works. As the law now stands (cp. Land Act, 1896, s. 1 (10)), improvements are presumed to have been made by the tenant, except (a) they were made before 1850; or (b) the estate is "English-managed"; or (c) the Court is satisfied from all the circumstances that the improvements were not made by the tenant; or (d) the improvements were made previous to a sale of the holding (before 1 Aug. 1850) by the landlord. But it must be remembered that if the holding be subject to the Ulster custom, there is a general presumption that the improvements belong to the tenant. (See judgment of Bailey, Sub-Com., in Boyle v. Richardson, 28 I. L. T. R. 153.)

4. Exclusions from the act. From the provisions as to compensation for disturbance are excluded tenants of demesne lands, pasture lettings, and "town-parks" (which may now be defined as holdings in the outskirts of a town, let to residents in the town, having an increased value as accommodation land, and not merely let and used as ordinary farms). (Cp. Land Act, 1881, s. 56; Act of 1887, s. 9; Act of 1896, s. 6.) From the provisions both as to disturbance and improvements are excluded tenants of lettings for temporary convenience, lettings in conacre (i.e., a letting of a small portion of land for a single crop of potatoes or other tillage, which is really a sale of a profit à prendre), and lettings for agistment. (Sect. 15.)

III. By far the most important of these acts is the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 49). Its aim was to put a tenant (not under an existing lease) who takes advantage of its provisions virtually in the position of owner of his holding, and to reduce the landlord's position practically to that of a mere rent-charger. It was meant to give tenants what were popularly called "the three F's"—fixity of tenure of the holding, fair rent, and free sale. And it created a new judicial body, called the Land Commission, with jurisdiction to hear and determine all matters of law or fact arising under the act—a concurrent primary jurisdiction also existing in the Civil Bill Courts (the County Courts of Ireland), with right of appeal to the Land Commission. The head of this Commission, the Judicial Commissioner, ranks as a puisne judge of the High Court; and there are two other chief commissioners, who, by the Land Purchase Act, 1891, are to hold office on the same tenure as County Court judges. Assistant commissioners are appointed by the Lord Lieutenant with the approval of the Treasury. This body is, by the Land Purchase Act, 1891, made perpetual.

The main provisions of the act (as now amended by the Land Act, 1896) may be considered under the following heads:—

1. Scope and application of the act.
2. Tenant's powers to dispose of his holding.
3. Creation and incidents of a statutory term.
4. Tenant's rights to have a fair rent fixed.

1. The question of the scope and application of the act, and of the exclusions from it, is complicated. It makes a distinction between "present" and "future" tenancies. (Sect. 57.) A present tenancy is one existing at the passing of the Act (22nd August, 1881), or created before 1st January, 1883, in a holding in which a tenancy existed at the passing of the act. Any other is a future tenancy; but now, by consent, the landlord and tenant may make any tenancy a present tenancy. (Sect. 18, Act 1896.) Formerly, in the case of tenants under limited owners, when the interest of a limited owner determined, the tenancies under his successor became new and future tenancies; but this is overruled by sect. 10 of the Act of 1896. As to the application of the act to present and future tenancies respectively—it seems that the provisions as to disposition by the tenant apply to both present and future tenancies; those as to the statutory term apply to present tenancies, and to future tenancies only in case the landlord and tenant have agreed to an increase of rent (sect. 4); the provisions as to fair rent apply solely to present tenancies.

Even of present tenancies, many are excluded from the act. These are specified in sect. 58, and are, besides those tenancies not substantially agricultural or pastoral, tenancies in demesne lands, town-parks, and several others. (See the section, on which there is a mass of decisions, and cp. sect. 5, Act 1896.)

Tenancies may also be excluded by agreement between landlord and tenant for a lease approved of by the Court, called a judicial lease. (Sect. 10.) And a tenant whose holding is valued at not less than 150*l.* yearly, may contract himself out of the act. (Sect. 22.)

2. One of the great objects of the act was to give the tenant a power of disposing of his holding, by alienation inter vivos (sect. 1), or by bequest (sect. 3)—to put him, in fact, in a somewhat similar position to a tenant under the Ulster custom. Sect. 1 provides that the tenant of any holding to which the act applies may sell his holding for the best price that can be got, subject to the regulations set forth in the act. These regulations provide that notice of the sale shall be given to the landlord, who thereupon has three courses open to him. He may (a) consent to the sale; or (b) he may elect to purchase the holding himself at what the Court decides to be its true value; and this has been held to be not necessarily the value of the holding in the open market, but "what, having regard to the interests of landlord and tenant respectively, is the true estimate of price between them"¹ (per Sullivan, M.R., in Adams v. Dunseath, 10 L. R.

¹ The true value is related to the "open value" as the fair rent to the "competition rent." (Curneen v. Tottenham, (1896) Ir. 143); or (c) he may object to the purchaser on reasonable grounds, and the reasonableness of his objection will, in case of dispute, be determined by the Court; if, however, the improvements on the holding have been made and maintained by the landlord, his objection is conclusive. There are also regulations as to the satisfaction of arrears of rent out of the purchase-money. A tenant holding under the Ulster custom may, if he choose, sell under that custom and not under the act (sect. 1 (12)); and if he does so, the landlord has no right (b) of pre-emption. The tenant has also a right to mortgage his holding, and in that case the landlord's only right is (c). (Sect. 19, Act 1896.)

Sect. 3 provides that if a tenant bequeaths his tenancy, his legatee shall have the same right to be accepted by the landlord as a purchaser would have. If a tenant dies intestate, his personal representatives may nominate one of the next of kin to succeed to the tenancy; if there are no next of kin, the tenancy goes to the landlord subject to the tenant's debts.

3. Another great object was to give fixity of tenure. This is attained by enabling a tenant to enlarge his interest into a statutory term, which is virtually an interest in a tenancy in perpetuity, subject to having the rent revised at intervals of fifteen years, and to statutory conditions, on breach of which the landlord can determine it by ejectment founded on notice to quit. A statutory term may be created (a) by agreement for an increased rent under sect. 4 (1); (b) by having a fair rent fixed, either by the Court or by arbitration (sect. 40); (c) by filing in Court an agreement for a judicial rent. (Sect. 8 (6).) During this term the rent cannot be increased, except by agreement in respect of capital laid out by the landlord. The conditions to which it is subject, and on breach of which it may be determined, are (sect. 5):—(a) payment of rent by the tenant; (b) tenant not committing persistent waste; (c) tenant not sub-dividing or sub-letting without consent; (d) tenant not doing any act to vest his interest in an assignee in bankruptcy; (e) tenant not opening a public-house on the holding without consent. The landlord is given rights of entry for certain purposes, and a restricted right of resumption. It is to be noted that the statutory term can now outlast the interest of the landlord under whom it is created. (Sect. 10, Act 1896.)

4. Finally, tenants were enabled to have fair rents for their holdings judicially fixed. Sect. 8 provides that the tenant, or the landlord in case he has demanded an increase of rent which has been refused, may apply to the Court to fix a fair rent, called a judicial rent. The Court is to fix this fair rent on considering all the circumstances of the case, holding, and district, and having regard to the interest of landlord and tenant respectively, i.e. (semble) to the "occupation interest" of the tenant, and the ownership of the landlord subject to that interest; and it is particularly provided that no rent shall be made payable by the tenant in respect of improvements made by him or his predecessors in title, unless these have been already compensated. The Land Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 47), now requires the Court, on fixing this fair rent, to record, in the form of a schedule, full particulars as to improvements, the condition of the holding, and generally all matters taken into account in fixing the fair rent—to record, in short, the grounds of its judgment. (Sect. 1.)

2 I. R. p. 362.) It may be more than the tenant could get as compensation for disturbance. (Johnson v. Courtney, 31 I. L. T. R. 117.)

The leading case of Adams v. Dunseath (10 L. R. Ir. 109), has decided that improvements here must have the same meaning as in the Land Act, 1870—i.e., must mean improvement works, not increased letting value—and that the reduction of rent in respect of them is to be only in proportion to the amount of labour and capital actually expended in making them. "English-managed" estates are excluded from the benefits of the section.

IV. All later Land Acts may be said to be amendments and extensions of the Act of 1881, and in particular of provisions contained in it for assisting tenants to purchase the fee simple of their holdings. The Land Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 33), enabled leaseholders who would, under sect. 21, Act 1881, at the expiration of their existing leases be deemed in the position of tenants from year to year of "present tenancies," to take the benefits of the Act of 1881 within a specified time. It enabled them, in fact, to anticipate their future rights. (Sect. 1.) It may be noted that if a lessee under a lease for lives—whose interest would of course be freehold (see p. 60, supra)—has a fair rent fixed under this section, his interest is thereby converted into personal estate. (M'Evoe v. M'Evoe, (1897) 1 I. R. 295.) And the Redemption of Rent Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 57), enables lessees under long terms, and grantees in fee farm, to have their rents redeemed by advances from the Land Commission, or if the landlord will not consent to that, to have a fair rent fixed. In fixing such fair rent the grantee in fee farm has now practically the same rights as an ordinary tenant, as to exemption from rent on improvements. (Sect. 14, Act 1896, supplementing Mairs v. Lecky, (1895) 2 I. R. 479.)

The Land Purchase Acts of 1885 and 1891 (48 & 49 Vict.

c. 73; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 48), are important rather from an administrative and financial, than from a legal point of view. They supply a machinery by which the State, through the Land Commission, will assist tenants to purchase their holdings by voluntary agreement with their landlords. The assistance given is an advance of the purchase-money, by an issue of guaranteed land stock, which the tenant repays by an annuity in favour of the Land Commission, extending over forty-nine years. It is important to note, that land thus acquired by the tenant devolves, at his death, upon his personal representative, like a chattel real, and is, in respect of succession and administration, treated as personal estate. (Local Registration of Title Act, 1891.) Registration of the ownership of such land is compulsory. (54 & 55 Vict. c. 66, ss. 22, 84—89.)

APPENDIX C.

REGISTRATION IN IRELAND.

THERE are in Ireland two systems of registration : (a) registration of assurances (and of judgments), being a record of dealings with land ; and (b) registration of title, being a record of the ownership of land. The former system is similar to, but somewhat more extensive than, that prevailing under the English Registry Acts in the so-called Register Counties. (See supra, p. 182.) The provisions of the latter system are similar to those which the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87) and 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65, supra, p. 211), enacted for England, with this important difference: that whereas registration under those Acts is so far voluntary, and in practice comparatively rare, there is in Ireland, under the Local Registration of Title Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 66), a large class of lands the ownership of which must be registered, viz., lands sold and conveyed to or vested in a purchaser under the Purchase of Land (Ireland) Acts (see Appendix B.), subject to a charge for repayment of an advance of purchase-money. The registration of all other land is voluntary. When land is registered under the Registration of Title Acts, it ceases to be subject to the ordinary law as to registration of assurances. Since, however, all other land in Ireland is so subject, we shall first briefly notice the provisions of the Irish Registry Acts.

I. The chief of these are the 6 Ann. c. 2 (Ir.), with various amending Acts, and (as to judgments) 13 & 14 Vict. c. 29. The statute of Anne provides for the registration, in a central office established by it, of all deeds, conveyances, and wills,¹ affecting land (sect. 3), except leases for years not exceeding twenty-one, accompanied by actual possession. (Sect. 14.) Such registration is effected by enrolling in the office a "memorial" of the instrument in question, i.e., a statement of its date, parties and witnesses, with their descriptions and residences, and of the lands affected by the instrument and their local situation. (Sect. 7.) This memorial is to be executed by a grantor or grantee under the instrument, and attested by two witnesses, one of whom was a witness to the original deed, and this latter witness is to prove, by affidavit filed along with the memorial, the execution both of memorial and deed. (Sect. 6.) The effect of such registration is to give registered instruments priority, according to the time of their registration, against all other assurances of the same land. (Sect. 4.) And unregistered assurances of lands comprised in a registered assurance are to be deemed fraudulent and void, both against the registered assurance and against creditors having a claim against the lands in question. (Sect. 5.) Generally speaking, a registered assurance will have priority of a previous unregistered assurance of the same lands, unless the party setting up the registered instrument has actual notice of the previous instrument, in which case equity deprives him of his statutory priority. (Le Neve v. Le Neve, 1 Ves. 64; Mill v. Hill, 3 H. L. O. 828.) As to the effect of registration in excluding the doctrine of tacking, see p. 182, supra.

¹ Since, however, unregistered wills were not declared void against subsequent purchasers, wills are in practice seldom registered. (Fury v. Smith, 1 H. & B. 759.)

It is to be noticed that non-registration of an instrument which should have been registered does not invalidate that instrument, but merely renders it liable to be defeated by a subsequent registered instrument; it is nevertheless good, e.g., as between grantor and grantee. (Jones v. Gibbon, 9 Ves. 407.) Nor does an instrument (e.g., a voluntary conveyance) gain any additional intrinsic validity from being registered. (In re Flood, 13 Ir. Ch. 312.) This, however, must be taken subject to the qualification that certain statutes make registration essential to the validity of certain assurances; thus, e.g., the Charitable Donations and Bequests Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 97, s. 16) avoids conveyances of lands in Ireland for pious or charitable uses unless registered within three months of their execution (wills are excepted).

II. Registration of Judgments as Judgment Mortgages.—Since the Act 13 & 14 Vict. c. 29, the lands of a judgment debtor can, in Ireland, no longer be seized under a writ of elegit. There are now only two ways in which a judgment can be made available against a debtor's lands: (a) chattel interests in land may be taken under a writ of fi. fa.; (b) the judgment may be registered under this act as a judgment mortgage (sect. 10); see as to this, p. 168, supra.

III. Registration of Title.—This was to some extent provided for by the Record of Title Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 88), which established a Record of Title Office for the registration of parliamentary titles to land, and of titles conferred by conveyances, and declarations of title made by the Landed Estates Court.¹ This act, however, is now of comparatively slight importance.

The Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 66), establishes a central registering authority in Dublin, and a local registering authority in each county in Ireland. (Sect. 4.) In these offices, the ownership of any lands purchased by tenants under the Land Purchase Acts, and subject to a charge for the repayment of purchase-money advanced under those acts, must be, and the ownership of any other land may be, registered (sect. 22); and so long as land remains registered under this act, the provisions as to registration of assurances do not apply to it. (Sect. 19.) If the original registration was voluntary, the owner may at any time have the land taken off the register. (Sect. 20.)

Registration is generally preceded by an investigation of the title by the registering authority, for the purpose of determining under which "kind of ownership" it shall be registered, and whether any "burdens" affect it. (Sect. 29.) There are two kinds of ownership which may be registered: (a) full ownership, i.e., ownership in fee; and (b) limited ownership, i.e., the ownership of a tenant in tail or for life. (Sect. 28.) "Burdens" or incumbrances are also of two kinds: (a) burdens which may affect registered land without the burdens being registered; these are enumerated in sect. 47, which see; and (b) burdens which may be registered as affecting registered land, which include incumbrances in general, and judgments. (See sect. 45.) Burdens rank in priority according to the time of their registration. (Sect. 49.)

¹ This Court was established in 1858, by the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 72, and is now a branch of the Chancery Division. Its function is to facilitate the sale of the incumbered estates so common in Ireland; and to take charge of them until sold, by appointing receivers. Any incumbrancer can apply for a sale, which is preceded by an investigation of title to the lands, of the priority of charges existing upon them, and the rights of all persons in regard to them. A Landed Estates Court conveyance creates a certain and indefeasible title to whatever it purports to convey, against which no averment can be made. (Sect. 61, and Re Tottenham's Estate, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 529.) When a receiver has been appointed, it is now the duty of the Land Judge, with the assistance of the Land Commission, to offer the estate for purchase in the first instance to the tenants. (Sect. 40, Land Act, 1896, and Re Owen's Estate, (1897) 1 I. R. 200.)

The effect of registration is to vest the fee simple in the person registered as full owner, or in the person registered as limited owner and the other persons entitled under the settlement collectively, subject to such burdens as may affect the land. (Sect. 30.) This ownership is evidenced by the delivery to the person entitled of a "land certificate" (sect. 31); and a deposit of this certificate as security for a loan has the same effect as a deposit of title deeds, i.e., creates an equitable mortgage. (Sect. 81.) The register is then conclusive evidence of the title to the land (sect. 34), and upon it all transfers and devolutions will thenceforth appear, any instrument of transfer being ineffectual till it does appear on the register. (Sect. 36.) Charges on the registered land are to be made by an instrument of charge, which, when registered, has the effect of a mortgage by deed (sect. 40); when a charge is satisfied, the satisfaction is in like manner entered on the register, and the charge thereupon ceases to operate. (Sect. 42.)

It is important to note, that adverse possession gives no title to registered land until the person thereby claiming has obtained from the Court an order declaring his title, and ordering the rectification of the register accordingly. (Sect. 52.)

A separate register of leasehold land is to be kept. (Sect. 53.)

Generally speaking, no trust affecting registered land will appear on the register. (Sect. 63.)

As has been observed in a previous note (see Appendix B.), land registered as having been purchased under the Purchase Acts is to devolve like personalty. (Sects. 83—89.) Notwithstanding any testamentary disposition of the owner, it devolves upon his personal representatives like a chattel real (sect. 84); and they hold it, as they do personalty, in trust for the persons beneficially entitled under the deceased owner's will, or by way of intestate succession. (Sect. 85.) All canons of descent, and rules as to curtesy and dower, are abolished with respect to such land; but the word heirs, used as a word of limitation in an instrument executed before the act, is to have the same effect as if the act had not passed; and in an instrument made after the act, it is to be construed as meaning the persons beneficially entitled by way of intestate succession to the ancestor's personal estate. (Sect. 89.)

APPENDIX D.

SHIPS.

SHIPS are a species of personal property, and are therefore subject, in the absence of other provisions, to the ordinary rules relating to the acquirement, transmission, and devolution of goods. But they are also subject, by reason of their important and peculiar character, to a large body of special rules, and it is therefore necessary to consider briefly the mode in which interests in ships can be dealt with and disposed of. For, as was said by Turner, L. J., in Hooper v. Gunn (L. R. 2 Ch. Ap. 282), "a ship is not like ordinary personal property; it does not pass by delivery, nor does the possession of it prove the title to it; there is no market overt for ships."

The effect of statutory enactments has been to put ships, as far as the mode of dealing with them is concerned, in a position very like that of land, the title to which has been registered. A Registry of Shipping has been established in the ports of the United Kingdom; and every ship, with the exception of small coasting vessels or vessels engaged in inland navigation, must be registered therein if it is to be recognized as or have the privileges of a British ship. (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 1.)

Moreover, there exists a restriction as to the persons who can be considered as owners of a British ship—a restriction such as no longer exists in the case of any other kind of property under English law. Just as formerly an alien could not hold land in England, so still an alien cannot be owner of a British ship. The persons qualified for such ownership are either—(a) British subjects, whether they have become such by birth, naturalization, or denization, or (b) a body corporate, under the law of some portion of the British Empire, and having its principal place of business within the empire. (Sect. 1.)

There is a further restriction as to the number of persons who can be registered as owners of any one ship; this number is fixed at 64. This does not mean that no more than 64 individuals can possibly be beneficially interested in a ship. The provision simply is that not more than 64 individuals shall be registered, and that a ship shall be considered as divisible into not more than 64 shares; but this provision is not to affect the beneficial title of any number of persons or of any company, claiming through the registered owners. (Sect. 5.)

The first entry of a ship upon the register is preceded by a survey, for the purpose of ascertaining its tonnage, and by a declaration as to the ownership, which is evidenced by a certificate of the builder. (Sects. 6, 8, and 9.) The fact of registry is then evidenced by a certificate of registry, containing the name of the ship, the port at which she is registered (called the port of registry), particulars as to her tonnage, build, and origin, the name of the owners and of the master. (Sect. 14.) Every subsequent change in the ownership of the vessel is indorsed on this certificate, which is finally delivered up to the registry authorities on the ship being lost or ceasing to be a British ship. (Sect. 20.)

Transfers of Ships.—A ship being thus entered upon the register, a legal transfer either of the whole ship or of any share therein—i. e., a transfer entitling the transferee to be put on the register in place of the transferor—can be made only between persons qualified as above stated to own a British ship, by means of a bill of sale duly attested; and it must be evidenced by the requisite entries and alterations in the register. This bill of sale, or instrument of transfer, is to be in the form set out in the schedule to the act, and attested in the manner therein provided. (Sect. 24.) It is, moreover, to be accompanied by a declaration of transfer. (Sect. 25.) This is a declaration made by the transferee, containing a statement of his qualification to be the registered owner of a British ship, and a further statement that no unqualified person is entitled, legally or equitably, to the ship or a share therein. Upon the bill of sale and the declaration of transfer being produced to the registrar at the ship's port of registry, he makes the requisite alteration in the registered ownership by entering the name of the transferee as the new owner, and indorses on the bill of sale a memorandum of such entry.

Devolution.—The devolution of ships, on the death or bankruptcy of the owner, is governed by the rules applicable to the devolution of other personal property; but the person succeeding to the rights of ownership acquires no power of disposition over the ship until his rights are authenticated by the proper entry in the register. As on a transfer by bill of sale, so here, the successor must make a declaration of transmission, containing similar statements to those in the declaration of transfer, and this is entered on the register in a similar manner. (Sect. 27.)

If a transfer, either inter vivos or on death, is made to a person not qualified to own a British ship, the Court has power, on the application of any person interested, to order a sale of the ship, and such order will nominate some person to execute the transfer upon sale. (Sect. 28.) It is also open to a person interested to apply that transfer of the ship shall be prohibited for a specified time. (Sect. 30.)

Equitable Transfers.—A transfer of the equitable interest in a ship may be made without the formalities necessary for a transfer of the legal interest. It is, in fact, expressly provided that no notice of any trust is to appear on the register (sect. 65); but equitable interests may be enforced by or against registered owners, in the same manner as in respect of any other personal property. (Sect. 57.)

Mortgages of Ships.—The provisions as to the creation of a mortgage on a ship are analogous to those relating to the mode of transferring the ship completely. The mortgage is an instance of a statutory mortgage. (See p. 168, supra.) An instrument making a ship, or a share in it, security for a loan, must be in the form provided in the schedule to the act, and be registered at the ship's port of registry. (Sect. 31.) If there be more than one such instrument affecting a ship, the various mortgages are entered on the register in the order of their production to the registrar, and have priority inter se, not according to the date of their execution, but of their registration. (Sect. 33.) The effect of a mortgage is not to make the mortgagee owner of the ship, or to give him any of the powers of an owner, except such as are necessary for enabling him to realize his security. (Sect. 34.) This he may do by means of his power of sale. A sole mortgagee has an absolute power of sale over the ship; a puisne mortgagee has only a power exercisable either with the concurrence of the prior mortgagees or under an order of the Court. (Sect. 35.) In case of the owner becoming bankrupt after having mortgaged his ship, the mortgage remains unaffected by the bankruptcy, and the mortgagee is preferred to the other creditors, so far as the ship is concerned. (Sect. 36.) A mortgagee may transfer his mortgage by an instrument of transfer duly authenticated and registered (sect. 37); and on the mortgage being paid off, its discharge is entered on the register on production of the instrument of mortgage with the mortgagee's receipt indorsed upon it. (Sect. 32.)

APPENDIX E.

PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.

FORM 1.—Conveyance or Deed of Grant under the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41).

'THIS INDENTURE made the 8th day April 1895 Between	Date.
Frederic Benson of Addington in the county Kent gentleman	Parties.
(hereinafter called the vendor) of the one part and Abraham Smith of Croydon in the county of Surrey Builder (hereinafter called the purchaser) of the other part	[Recital of title.] [² WHEREAS the vendor is seised in unincumbered fee simple in possession of the hereditaments hereinafter expressed to be hereby conveyed AND
WHEREAS the vendor has agreed with the purchaser for the sale	[Recital of contract.] to him of the said hereditaments for the sum of £1,000 Now
THIS INDENTURE] WITNESSETH that [in pursuance of the said	Testatum.
agreement and] in ³ consideration of the sum of £1,000 now paid	Consideration.
to the vendor by the purchaser ("the receipt whereof the vendor	Receipt.

¹ A conveyance is usually commenced in this way. The use of the words "This Indenture" is merely a survival, and has now no force. It is obviously convenient to have the date and parties thus clearly set out at the beginning of the deed.

² The words in italics are not necessary and are now (at any rate in conveyances of small properties) usually omitted. (Note Bolton v. London School Board, 7 Ch. D. 766.)

³ A conveyance "unto and to the use of" the grantee needs no consideration to support it. If, however, any consideration has been given, it must be set out to avoid difficulties under the provisions of the Stamp Act and the Bankruptcy Act. (See supra, p. 254.)

⁴ The receipt contained in the deed entitles the purchaser to pay the purchase-money to any solicitor producing the deed (sect. 56, Conveyancing Act, 1881), and relieves him and all subsequent purchasers from any equity or lien the vendor might otherwise have for his purchase-money in the event of its never having actually come into his hands, or in words.

Operative
Parcels.

Habendum.
Covenants.

hereby acknowledges) the vendor as 'Beneficial Owner hereby 'conveys unto the purchaser and 'his heirs ALL THAT piece of land situate in the parish of Beddington in the county of Surrey and having a frontage to a road there called the Epsom Road of seventy-five feet 'as the same piece of land with the other dimensions and abutments thereof is more particularly described in the plan thereof drawn on these presents wherein the site of the said piece of land is distinguished by the colour pink Together with the messuage erected thereon and known as Lakeview To HOLD the same unto and 'to the use of the purchaser in 'fee simple 'And the vendor hereby acknowledges the right of the purchaser to the production of the documents of title short particulars whereof are set out in the schedule hereto and to delivery of copies thereof and hereby undertakes with the purchaser for the safe custody of the said documents IN WITNESS whereof favour of subsequent purchasers without notice in the event of its not having been actually paid. (Sect. 55.) Moreover, it is a sufficient receipt; there is no need, as there was prior to the Conveyancing Act, of a further receipt being indorsed on the deed. (Sect. 54.)

¹ These words are very important, as they imply a number of statutory covenants under sect. 7 (1) (A.) Conveyancing Act. (See supra, p. 220.)

² There is no special force in the word "convey." Any other of the old conveyancing words, such as "grant," would do equally well; but this word, having been used throughout the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is now usually adopted in deeds of conveyance.

³ The use of the words "and his heirs" is not usual or necessary.
They, in fact, render the habendum in the case of a conveyance for value unnecessary, and when used are used ex majore cautela to provide against any possible omission of or in the latter clause.

⁴ It is always well to have a plan of any but ancient tenements. Care should be taken in preparing the plan to make it show the position of the land conveyed in reference to some permanent landmark, such as the corner of a road. A plan very often met with, that merely shows a piece of land abutting on a road, is of very little value. The ownership of the fences should, if possible, be indicated. No words are necessary to include such fences as do belong to the land conveyed.

⁵ These words—"and to the use of"—are unnecessary where the conveyance is for value, but have been used in all conveyances since the Statute of Uses, whether the conveyance in fact relies on that statute or not. Their insertion in a voluntary conveyance prevents the law presuming that a resulting use in favour of the grantor was intended.
(See supra, p. 95.) As to the use made of these words for the purpose of creating executory interests, see supra, p. 141.

⁶ The words—"in fee simple"—have the effect, under sect. 51 of the Conveyancing Act, of creating an estate in fee simple without the use of the words "and his heirs," which before the act were essential.

⁷ This acknowledgment and undertaking is very common, and is given in all cases in which any of the title deeds are retained by the vendor as relating to other property of his. The effect of the provisions is set out in the Conveyancing Act, sect. 9.

the 'said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

(THE SCHEDULE above referred to.)

Frederic Benson. (L.S.)

²Signed sealed and delivered by the said Frederic Benson in the presence of Charles Richard Henry Gower, Solicitor,

1000, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.

FORM 2.—Mortgage of Freehold Land and Messuage conveyed by preceding Deed of Grant.

THIS INDENTURE made the 9th day of April 1895 between Abraham Smith of Croydon in the county of Surrey Builder (hereinafter called the mortgagor) of the one part¹ and John Jones of Streatham in the same county Esquire and Samuel Smith of Balham in the same county Esquire (hereinafter called the mortgagees) of the other part WITNESSETH that in consideration of the sum of £500 paid to the mortgagor by the mortgagees⁴ out of the money belonging to them on a joint account (the receipt whereof the mortgagor hereby acknowledges) the mortgagor hereby covenants with the mortgagees to pay to them on the⁵ 9th day

¹ A conveyance such as this is usually executed by the vendor only. The mode of execution is as follows:—The vendor signs his name opposite the seal, which may be wax, wafer, or any mark made on the paper or parchment on which the deed is engrossed, and intended to be a seal; and then placing his finger on the seal he seals and delivers the deed by saying "This is my act and deed," or "I deliver this as my act and deed."

² The attestation is not strictly necessary. The execution can be proved by any other person, but it is usual and obviously proper to have an attestation. A deed not duly attested would be regarded with suspicion, and there would be no presumption of due sealing and delivery—a ceremony which, as a fact, is not unfrequently omitted. The purchaser may, under sect. 8 of the Conveyancing Act, require the conveyance to be executed by the vendor in the presence of a person appointed by him for the purpose.

³ Mortgagees are very frequently trustees. No notice of the trust should be brought on the mortgage, or subsequent dealers with the property will be bound to investigate the trust title.

⁴ This phrase is put in to rebut the presumption in equity that the money belongs to the lenders as tenants in common, and to enable the survivor of them to sue, transfer, or give receipts alone. (See supra, p. 110.)

⁵ This date is usually six months after the date of the mortgage. If the mortgagor does not repay on this date he is bound to give six months' notice to the mortgagee before repaying, or to pay six months' interest from the date of his notice to redeem. (See supra, p. 179.) The mortgagee cannot sell till after this date, and then can only sell after giving three months' notice to the mortgagor to repay the loan, unless interest is in arrear for more than two months. (Conveyancing Act, 1881, sect. 20.)

of October next the sum of £500 with interest thereon in the meantime at the rate of £5 per centum per annum¹ And also so long after that day as any principal money shall remain due on the security of these presents to pay to the mortgagees interest thereon at the rate aforesaid by equal half-yearly payments on the 9th day of April and the 9th day of October in every year AND THIS INDENTURE ALSO WITNESSETH that for the consideration aforesaid the mortgagor as² Beneficial Owner hereby conveys unto the mortgagees and their heirs³ ALL that piece of land &c. as the same premises with the dimensions and abutments thereof are more particularly delineated in the plan drawn in the margin of an indenture of conveyance dated the 8th day of April 1895 and made between Frederic Benson of the one part and the mortgagor of the other part To HOLD the same unto and to the use of the mortgagees in fee simple⁴ as joint tenants⁵ PROVIDED ALWAYS that if the mortgagor shall pay to the mortgagees the said sum of £500 on the 9th day of October next with interest thereon as aforesaid in accordance with the foregoing covenant in that behalf, the said hereditaments shall at the request and cost of the mortgagor his heirs or assigns be reconveyed to him or them⁶ And the mortgagor hereby covenants with the mortgagees that the

¹ The separate covenant to pay interest half-yearly, if the principal is not repaid on the date fixed for repayment, is necessary, to enable the interest to be recovered without the principal, and is obviously convenient. It is not usually advisable to rely on implied covenants or imported provisions of law on points which are of immediate interest to the parties.

² These words import the covenants mentioned in sub-sect. 1 (C), sect. 7, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. They are much wider than the covenants implied by the same words in a conveyance for value, being covenants for an absolute title; but the additional liability is of little value, as the damages, except as to any costs incurred in properly defending an action for recovery of the land by a third party, could not be more than the principal debt and interest which would be recoverable from the mortgagor in any case.

³ The parcels should follow the words of the conveyance to the mortgagor.

⁴ These words ("as joint tenants") are not strictly necessary, but they strengthen the previous declaration that the money was lent on a joint account.

⁵ English mortgages have always been taken in this form—as absolute conveyance with a proviso for reconveyance on payment of the loan—contrary to the later and modern Roman law. (See supra, p. 166.)

⁶ There is no implied covenant by the mortgagor to insure, but under the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the mortgagee can effect an insurance, and the premiums are a charge on the mortgaged property. (Sect. 19, sub-sects. i, ii.) It is more convenient that the mortgagor should insure and produce the receipt for the premium. The mortgagee can himself insure if default is made. The insurance is commonly effected and looked after by the mortgagee's solicitor.

mortgagor will insure and keep insured the said hereditaments against loss or damage by fire in the Gresham Insurance Office or in some other assurance office approved by the mortgagees in the joint names of the mortgagor and the mortgagees in the sum of '£500 at least and will on request produce to the mortgagees the policy of such insurance and the receipt for every premium payable in respect thereof And² it is hereby declared that no lease of the said premises made by the mortgagor during the continuance of this security shall have effect by force or virtue of the 18th section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act 1881 unless the mortgagees shall consent thereto in writing. In witness &c.

FORM 3.—A Will providing for Wife and Children, all the Property being left in Trust for Sale and Conversion.

¹This is the last will made 'this 1st day of April, 1895, of me, Abraham Smith of Croydon, in the county of Surrey, Builder.

'1. I appoint John Newton, Esquire, of Croydon, and Harvey Medland, Esquire, of Addiscombe, and my dear wife Mary Anne (hereinafter called my trustees), executors and executrix and trustees of this my will.'

2. I appoint the said John Newton, Harvey Medland, and my wife, guardians of my infant children.

3. I give the following ³specific legacies:—

To my sister, &c.

To my wife all the residue of my furniture, books, plate,

¹ This should be the full value of the buildings, which will usually be at least the amount of the mortgage debt.

² This is a usual and proper provision where the mortgaged property is a house in a town, or the mortgage money is large compared with the value of the premises.

³ The commencement is often "I, A. B." It is better, however, to begin with an indication of the nature of the instrument.

⁴ It is convenient to have the date at the commencement: it is very usually placed at the end.

⁵ A will should always start with the appointment of executors and trustees (if any). Executors are essential to a will, and formerly a will by which no executors were appointed was invalid. (See supra, p. 231.)

⁶ Add if any realty is settled otherwise than by trust for sale "for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts." As to powers of sale when land is settled by way of trust for sale, see supra, p. 59.

⁷ The mother is a guardian without appointment by virtue of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27), but it is usual in order to show the testator's confidence in her, to appoint her formally a testamentary guardian.

⁸ As to what is meant by a specific legacy, see supra, p. 243.

china, glass, and household effects, in my dwelling-house at my decease.

4. I give the following 'pecuniary legacies:—

To my wife the sum of £ payable immediately after my decease.¹

To my sister, &c.

5. I direct that the said legacies, 'specific and pecuniary, shall be delivered and paid free of legacy and other duties.

6. I 'devise and bequeath all my property (other than the things hereinbefore specifically bequeathed), real and personal unto my trustees UPON TRUST that my trustees shall sell, call in, and convert into money, the same or such part thereof as shall not consist of ready money, and with and out of the proceeds of such sale, calling in, and conversion, and with and out of my ready money, shall 'pay my funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and the pecuniary legacies bequeathed by this my will or any codicil hereto, and the duties thereon; and shall invest the residue of the said trust moneys (hereinafter called my residuary trust funds), and shall hold the said residuary trust funds and the investments for the time being representing the same, upon the trusts hereinafter declared.

7. I declare that my trustees shall hold the said residuary trust funds in trust to pay out of the income arising therefrom to my said wife during her life, the annual sum of £ by equal quarterly payments, the first to be made at the end of 'six months from my decease, and subject thereto, for all my

¹ General legacies are often called pecuniary legacies. (See supra, p. 243.)

² It is usual to leave the wife a pecuniary legacy immediately payable, in order to provide her with funds until the executors are in a position to distribute the assets among the beneficiaries under the will generally. Executors are entitled to a year—called the executors' year—for the purpose of winding up the testator's affairs. Until then they are under no obligation to pay legacies not made by the will immediately payable. As to annuities, see supra, p. 300.

³ There is no legacy duty on a specific legacy of less value than 20l. All pecuniary legacies pay duty except those given to children of the testator, when the duty is covered by the estate duty, and to the wife, which are exempt.

⁴ This general trust for sale and conversion is very usual and very convenient. It makes the trustees universal successors, and enables them to deal without difficulty with the whole of the testator's estate. It is usually better to adopt this form and give powers to retain any portion unconverted than to except the realty from the trust for sale and give only a power of sale over it to the executors—more especially in the case of small properties. It also facilitates payment of death duties, and does not now, as it did before the Finance Act, 1894, increase the duties. All duties are now payable on the capital value of the estate (real and personal) of the testator.

⁵ As to the duties of executors, see supra, p. 246.

⁶ The trustees will usually be in a position to make a payment out of income at the end of six months. In making this provision, however, children who have attained or shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being daughters, have attained or shall attain that age or marry under that age, in equal shares, and if there shall be only one such child, the whole shall be held in trust for that one child.

8. I declare that 'if any child of mine shall die during my lifetime leaving a child or children who shall survive me and attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being a daughter, attain that age or marry under that age, such last-mentioned child or children shall take, and if more than one equally between them, the share in any residuary estate to which his, her, or their parent would have been entitled under this my will had such parent survived me and attained the age of twenty-one years.

9. I declare that 'my trustees may at any time or times in their discretion raise any part or parts not exceeding together one moiety of the expectant share of any child or grandchild of mine under this my will, and apply the same for his or her advancement, preferment, or benefit, as my trustees may think fit.

10. I declare that 'my trustees may postpone the sale or conversion of any part of my real or personal estate for so long as they may think fit, and that in the meantime the income arising therefrom shall be payable and applicable in like manner as the income arising from the investments of my residuary trust funds.

regard must be had to the nature of the testator's property—whether it is capable of ready realisation, &c.—and sufficient money payable at once (see paragraph 4, supra) should be left to the wife to pay the annuity given her up to the time when the trustees will have income in hand.

¹ The children's interest being given to them as a class, the provisions of sect. 33 of the Wills Act do not apply. It should be borne in mind that that section gives the grandchildren no interest under the will, but merely makes their parent's share part of his estate. (See supra, p. 241.)

² The Conveyancing Act, 1881, gives no power to the trustees to make advances of capital. It merely entitles trustees to apply, at discretion, any income for the infant's maintenance, education, or benefit (sect. 42), whether there is any other fund available for such purposes or not. (Sect. 43.)

³ This provision is always desirable; but the trustees will usually be wise in converting and investing the estate in trust securities. When no such power as this is contained in a will, it is always the duty of the trustees to sell at the earliest moment when the settlement is by way of trust for sale. When, however, there is no trust for sale, it is a question in each case whether the testator intended the life tenant to enjoy the personal property in specie. Formerly, the rule was that in the absence of an express provision to this effect, the trustees were bound to realise all wasting securities—such as short leaseholds—and reversionary property, and pay the life tenant the interest on the capital; but now the leaning of the Court is rather the opposite way. (See Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 2 W. & T. Lead. Cas. and note.)

11. I declare that ¹my trustees may, as regards any real or leasehold property remaining unsold, let or demise the same from year to year or for any term of years, subject to such rents, covenants, or conditions as they may deem fit, and may accept surrenders of leases and tenancies, expend money, in repairs or improvements (²either out of capital or income, as they may deem just and expedient), and generally manage the same as they may in their discretion deem best.

12. I declare that ³the said John Newton and any other trustee of this my will, being a solicitor, may be employed by my trustees as their solicitor, and shall be entitled to charge and be paid for all professional work done by him, whether when so employed, or when acting alone in the proof of this will, or the execution of the trusts thereof, in like manner as he would have been entitled to charge and be paid had he been so employed and had not been an executor or trustee of this my will. As witness my hand, Abraham Smith.

⁴Signed by the said Abraham Smith ⁵as his last will in the presence of us, the undersigned, both being present at the same time, who, at his request, in his presence and in the presence of each other, have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses.

Samuel North,

Clerk, 1001, Mitcham Road, Croydon.

Evan Kirk,

Gentleman, 1001, London Road, Croydon.

¹ The trustees should be given this power, as, otherwise, there may be difficulties in granting leases.

² Disputes often arise as to the proper parties, as between immediate and reversionary beneficiaries, to bear the costs of repairs. To prevent these, it is well to give the trustees full discretion in the matter.

³ This is a usual and proper provision where one of the trustees is a solicitor, as, without this provision, neither he, nor a firm of which he is partner, can make any charge for any work done by them acting professionally for the benefit of the estate.

⁴ The statements contained in this attestation are every one of them material, and the omission of any one of them necessitates an affidavit of due execution of the will. (See supra, p. 233.)

⁵ It is desirable that these words should be used in order that the witnesses may understand and remember what it was they were witnessing. They should always be directed to read the attestation clause, and it should be written across the paper in the same manner as the will, leaving a blank line or two for the testator's signature, and not in the margin, as is commonly done. This secures that the signatures of the testator and witnesses shall be in their proper place, which was formerly of very great importance and is still, of course, desirable.

APPENDIX F.—TABLE OF LIMITATIONS AS TO PROPERTY.

Subject matter.	Statutes fixing Period.	Ordinary Period.	Extension for Disabilities.	Maximum.
Lands and hereditaments and profits of lands, ownership being in Crown.	9 Geo. 3, c. 16.	60 years.	None.
Same, ownership being in Duke of Cornwall.....	23 & 24 Vict. c. 53.	60 years.	None.	30 years.
Land and title to freehold rents, ownership in private person.	3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57.	12 years.	6 years.
Same, remainders, reversions, and executory interests in.	Same.		Same.	Same.
Same, ownership being in charitable and ecclesiastical corporation sole.	3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27.	6 years from future interest, or 12 years from particular estate vested in possession. Two incumbrances and 6 years, or 60 years, whichever may be the longer.	None.
Advowsons	Same; and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 54.	Same.	None.	100 years.
Money charged on land, judgments and legacies ..	3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57.	12 years.	None.
Money secured by mortgage or right of redemption, mortgagee being in possession.	Same; and 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28.	12 years.	None.
Arrears of rent or of interest on money charged on land, whether or not payment thereof secured by covenant, and of interest on legacies.	3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27; and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57.	6 years.	None.
Rights of way, support, and water	2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2.	20 years; and 40 years (indefeasible).	None.
Rights to light, as against private person	2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3.	20 years.	None.
Ditto, as against Crown.....	Same. (Perry v. Evans , (1891) 1 Ch. 658.)	No limitation.	..
Covenants, recognizances, and bonds	3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42 (In Ireland) 16 & 17 Vict. c. 113, ss. 20-23.	20 years.	Full period after removal of disability.
Simple contracts; torts to property, save the following one.	21 Jac. 1, c. 16; (In Ireland) 16 & 17 Vict. c. 113.	6 years.	Same.
Infringement of copyright.....	5 & 6 Vict. c. 45.	1 year.	Same.

INDEX.

- ABSOLUTE OWNERSHIP, characteristics, 10, 11.
subsists in goods, not in land, 15.
ownership of leasehold interests, 80.
- ABSTRACT OF TITLE, 200.
- ACCESSION, acquiring ownership by, 193.
- ACCUMULATIONS, restraint on, 157.
Accumulations Act, 1892...158.
law in Ireland, 159.
- ACKNOWLEDGMENTS by married women, 324.
- ACTIONS,
real and personal actions, 6, 38.
actions for payment of rent, 76.
actions by mortgagee, 176, 177, 179.
actions by mortgagor, 180.
probate actions, 229.
limitation of actions, 257.
actions for debt, 295, 299.
actions for torts, 298, 299.
actions by married women, 326.
- ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY, 251. See Bankruptcy.
- ADMINISTRATION, 265.
- ADMINISTRATOR, cum testamento annexo, 245.
durante minore etate, 245.
ad colligendum bona defuncti, 246.
of real estate, 265.
powers of an administrator, 265.
difference between administrator and executor, 266.
- ADVOWSONS,
incorporeal tenements, 276.
kinds of, 285.
right to present, 285.
presentations to be in writing, 286.
- AGREEMENTS, to convey freeholds, 199.
for lease, 208.
for sale of goods, 219.
- AIR, right to, 279. See Easements.

ALIEN,

- former disabilities as to land, 261.
- Naturalisation Act, 329.
- ownership of British ship, 329.

ALIENATION,

- of land : inter vivos, 199.
 - feoffment, 203.
 - bargain and sale, 204.
 - lease and release, 205.
 - covenant to stand seised, 206.
 - deed of grant, 207.
 - lease, 207.
 - assignment of lease, 211.
 - registered transfer, 211.
- of goods : inter vivos, 215.
 - gift and delivery, 217.
 - deed of gift, 218.
 - sale, 219.
 - bill of lading, 223.
- of land or goods : mortis causâ, 223.
 - donationes mortis causâ*, 224.
 - wills, 225.
- of choses in action, 295.
- of consols, 301.
- of stock and shares, 307.
- of patents, 312.
- of copyright, 314.
- of right to perform drama, &c., 314.
- of trade mark, 315.

ALIENATION, INVOLUNTARY,

- of fees simple, 35.
- of fees tail, 43.
- of life estates, 48, 54.
- of leaseholds, 78.
- of goods, 250.
- of bankruptcy, 250.

ALLODIAL OWNERSHIP, 19.ANIMALS,

- feræ naturæ*, 3, 8, 193.
- domesticated, 3.

ANNUITIES,

- charged on land, 283.
- personal annuities, 300.
- bank annuities, 300.

ANTICIPATION, RESTRAINT ON, 320. See Married Women.

APPOINTMENT, 147. See Powers.

APPORTIONMENT, 53.

APPURTENANCES, appurtenant and appendant distinguished, 275.

- ASSETS,
 of testator, 248.
 of deceased intestate, 265.
- ASSIGNMENT. See Alienation.
- ATTORNEY, POWER OF, 296.
- BAILMENT, 289.
- BANKRUPTCY,
 of tenant in tail, 43.
 an universal succession, 250.
 law in England and Ireland, 250.
 acts of bankruptcy, 251.
 adjudication, 252.
 effect of, on bankrupt's property, 252.
 effect on previous transactions, 254.
 duties of trustee in bankruptcy, 255.
 disabilities of bankrupt, 329.
- BARGAIN AND SALE, 204.
- BASE FEE, 31, 41.
- BASTARD. See Illegitimate Persons.
- BENEFICE. See Advowson.
- BEQUEST. See Legacies.
- BILLS OF EXCHANGE, 296. See Negotiable Instruments.
- BILLS OF LADING, 223, 297.
- BILLS OF SALE, 188.
 absolute bills, 189, 219.
 conditional bills, 189.
- BOROUGH-ENGLISH, 23.
- BOTES, 51.
- BREACH OF TRUST. See Trust.
- CERTIFICATE,
 of land, 213.
 of bankrupt's discharge, 255.
 of stock and shares, 301, 307.
- CESTUI QUE TRUST. See Trusts.
- CESTUI QUE VIE, 48.
- CHARGING ORDER, 302, 308.

- CHARITIES,
in England, 332.
in Ireland, 335.
- CHATTEL INTERESTS IN LAND,
origin of, 65.
nature of, 66.
kinds of, 67, 68—80.
settlements of, 80.
creation of, 207.
assignment of, 211.
devolution of, 242.
disclaimer by trustee in bankruptcy, 253.
- CHATTELS, 61. See Goods.
- CHILDREN,
appointments to children, 151.
devises and bequests to children, 328.
- CHIVALRY, TENURE IN, 20.
- CHOSSES IN ACTION. See Negotiable Instruments. wife's, 263.
what are, 294.
assignments of, 295.
devolution of, 299.
- CHOSSES IN POSSESSION. See Goods.
- CLANDESTINE MORTGAGES, 186.
- CLASS,
power to appoint to, 149.
gift by will to, 239.
- CODICIL, 225. See Will.
- COMMON, RIGHTS OF,
kinds of common, 280.
extinguishment of, 282.
- COMPANIES. See Corporations.
- CONCURRENT OWNERSHIP, 101.
- CONDITION,
kinds of, 160.
void conditions, 161.
conditions in restraint of marriage, 163.
conditional limitations, 163.
- CONDITIONAL OWNERSHIP, 159. See Mortgages.
- CONSIDERATION, 195.
- CONSOLS, 300. See Annuities.
- CONTRACTS. See Agreement; Sale.

CONVERSION, 88.

CONVEYANCE. See Alienation.

CONVICTS, 329.

COPARCENARY, 112.

COPYHOLDS,
 customary tenure, 20.
 chief incidents of copyholds, 21.
 history of copyhold tenure, 337.
 nature and incidents of, 339.
 alienation of, 340.
 enfranchisement of, 341.

COPYRIGHT,
 kinds of, 312.
 literary copyright, 313.

CORPORATIONS,
 nature of corporations, 101.
 kinds of corporations, 302.
 interests in corporations aggregate, 302.
 disabilities of corporations, 330.

COURT BARON, 338.

COURT OF CHANCERY, 83.

COVENANTS,
 breach of covenant, 72.
 covenants for title, 200.
 covenants in leases, 209.
 (a) by lessor, 209.
 (b) by lessee, 209.
 covenants running with land, 210.
 limitation of actions on covenants, 179, 367.

CREDITORS. See Alienation; Bankruptcy. conveyance for defrauding creditors, 195.

CROWN,
 all land held of Crown, 16.
 Crown jewels, 18.
 escheat to Crown, 260.
 rights of Crown to bona vacantia, 272.
 rights of Crown on conveyance in mortmain, 331.
 limitation of actions by Crown, 367.

CURTESY OF ENGLAND, 262.

DAMAGES, ACTION FOR, 299.

DEATH, effect on choses in action, 299.

DEBENTURES, 308.

DEBT. See Chose in Action.

judgment, 35.

specialty, 36.

infant's, 322.

married woman's, 324.

DEBTORS ACT, 1869...326.

DE DONIS CONDITIONALIBUS, 37.

DEED,

mortgage by deed, 170.

what is a deed, 206.

deed of grant, 207.

deed of gift, 218.

form of deed of grant, 359.

form of mortgage deed, 361.

DELIVERY, of deed, 206.

transfer of goods by, 217.

DESCENT, rules regulating descent of land and goods, 265.

DESIGNS, copyright in, 313.

DETINUE, 256.

DEVISE. See Will.

meaning of devise, 225.

power to devise, 226.

effect of devise, 228, 230.

lapsed devises, 240.

without words of limitation, 242.

DISABILITIES,

under Statute of Limitations, 258.

nature of disabilities, 318.

specific disabilities, 319.

general disabilities, 321.

infants, 322.

married women, 323.

lunatics, 326.

illegitimate persons, 328.

aliens, 328.

bankrupts, 329.

convicts, 329.

DISCLAIMER,

no disclaimer by heir, 16, 265.

by trustee in bankruptcy, 253.

DISTRESS, 76.

DISTRINGAS, 302.

DOMICILE, 234. See Will.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA, 224.

DOWER, 263.

DRAMATIC COMPOSITION, 314.

EASEMENTS,

- kinds of, 276.
- acquisition of, 277.
- prescription, 278.

EJECTMENT. See Forfeiture.

ELEGIT, 35.

EMBLEMENTS, 53.

ENFRANCHISEMENT of copyholds, 341.

ENROLMENTS, STATUTE OF, 205. See Inrolments.EQUITABLE INTERESTS, 81, 85, 95. See Trusts.EQUITABLE MORTGAGE. See Mortgage.

EQUITY,

- rise of, 84.
- operation of, 85.

ESCHEAT,

- incident of fee simple estates, 23.
- nature of right, 259.
- escheat of equitable estates, 261.
- escheat of rent-charge, 284.

ESTATES,

- in land only, 17.
- equitable estate, 96.

ESTOVERS, 51.

EXECUTION,

- of power of appointment, 150.
- of bill of sale, 189.
- of deed, 206.
- of will, 231.

EXECUTOR,

- office of, 231.
- position of, 244.
- duties of, 246.
- rights of, 246.

EXECUTORY INTERESTS,

- history of, 139.
- arising under wills and deeds, 141.
- not executory interest if possible contingent remainder, 142.
- springing and shifting uses, 144.
- springing and shifting devises and bequests, 145.

EXECUTRIX, 326. See Married Women.

EXPRESS TRUST (limitation), 94.

FACTORS, sales by, 217.

FEE, 24.

FEE FARM GRANTS,
in England, 32.
In Ireland, 33.

FEES SIMPLE,
no reversion, 29.
determinable fees, 30.
limitations over, after, 30.
lordships over fees simple, 31.
alienation, 34.
liability for debts, 35.

FEES TAIL,
nature of, 37.
alienation by action, 38.
alienation by deed, 39.
operation of disentailing deed, 40.
special fee, 42.
liability for debts, 43.
not devisable, 44.
tenants' leasing powers, 44.
position of tenant, 44.

FELONY, attainder on, 261.

FEME COVERT, 323. See Married Women.

FEOFFEE TO USES, 92.

FEOFFMENT, 203.

FEUD, 18.

FINE, 38.

FORFEITURE,
for breach of covenant, 72.
of equity of redemption, 186.
for felony or treason, 260.

FORMS,
deed of grant, 359.
mortgage, 361.
will, 363.

FRANCHISES, 283, 310.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES, to delay creditors, 196.
within Bankruptcy Act, 254.

FREEBENCH, 339.

FREEHOLD INTERESTS, 26.

FREE SOCAGE, 22.

FREE TENURES, 19.

FUNDS, 301.

FUTURE OWNERSHIP, 118.

GARNISHEE ORDER, 299.

GAVELKIND, 22, 99, 113, 270, 323.

GENERAL OCCUPANT, 48. See Estates pur autre vie.

GIFT AND DELIVERY, 217.

GIFT, DEED OF, 217.

GOODS,

- meaning of term, 6.
- ownership of goods, 15.
- no tenure in goods, 16.
- no estates in goods, 17.
- partial interests in goods at common law, 17, 82.
- partial interests in equity, 85.
- future interests in goods, 136.
- alienation of goods, 215.
- donationes mortis causæ*, 224.
- wills of goods, 227.
- succession to goods, 265.
- rights over goods owned by others, 288.

GRAND SERJEANTY, 20.

GRANT, DEED OF, 207.

GRANT OF COPYHOLDS, 340.

GROSS, incorporeal hereditaments in, 275.

GUARDIANS, 323. See Infants.

HABENDUM, 207.

HALF-BLOOD, 272. See Descent.

HEIR,

- meaning of term, 26.
- kind of heirs, 26.
- limitations to heirs, 125.
- no disclaimer by heir, 16, 265.

HEIRLOOMS, 17.

HEREDITAMENTS,

- meaning, 6.
- incorporeal hereditaments, 8, 274.
- personal hereditaments, 300.

HIRE OF GOODS, 82, 290. See Bailment.

HONOUR, titles of, 287.

HORSES, sale of, 216.

HUSBANDS. See Marriage.

covenants to settle property (bankruptcy), 254.

rights of, in wives' lands and goods, 262.

since Married Women's Property Act, 1882...263.

IDIOTS, 326. See Disabilities.

ILLEGITIMATE PERSONS, 328.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENTS, 149. See Powers.

IMPROVEMENTS, 64. See Settled Land Acts.

INCLOSURE, 282. See Common.

INCORPORATION, 101, 302. See Corporations.

INDORSEMENT, 296. See Negotiable Instruments.

INFANTS, 322. See Disabilities.

INHERITANCE. See Descent.

goods settled to attend inheritance, 18, 88.

INJUNCTION, 85. See Equity.

INROLMENTS,

of deeds barring entail, 40.

of assurances of land in Ireland, 182.

of assurances of land in Middlesex and Yorkshire, 182.

of land under Land Titles and Transfer Act, 182, 211.

of lis pendens, 198.

of bargains and sales of land, 204.

of annuities charged on land, 283.

of gifts to charities, 334.

ISSUE, die without, 242.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES, 304. See Corporations.

JOINT TENANCY. See Concurrent Ownership.

characteristics, 103.

fourfold unity, 103.

right of survivorship, 105.

severance of joint tenancy, 107.

severance at law, 108.

severance in equity, 109.

user of joint estate, 111.

trustees joint tenants, 112.

JUDGMENT, 249.

JUDGMENT DEBTS, 35.

JUDGMENT MORTGAGES, 168.

KIN, NEXT OF, 265.

KINSHIP, degrees of, 267.

KNIGHT-SERVICE. See Tenure.

LAND,

meaning of, 5.

tenure of, 16.

interests in, 18.

rights over land owned by others, 275.

LAPSE. See Legacies.

LAW AND EQUITY, 83.

LEASE,

kinds of leases, 54, 68.

leases from year to year, 68.

leases for terms of years, 69.

definition of lease, 207.

form of lease, 207.

rent under leases, 208.

covenants in leases, 209.

assignments of leases, 211.

LEASE AND RELEASE, 205.

LEASEHOLDS, determination of, 71.

incidents of, 74.

partial interests in, at law, 80.

partial interests in, in equity, 81.

bequests of, 242.

disclaimer of, by trustee in bankruptcy, 253.

husband's interests in wife's leaseholds, 262.

LEGACIES,

devises and legacies, 228.

kinds of legacies, 243.

lapse of legacies, 244.

payment of legacies, 244.

legacies of public stock, 301.

legacies of shares of stock in companies, 308.

to illegitimate children, 328.

LEGAL ESTATE, 96.

LEGAL MEMORY, 278.

LIABILITY OF DEBTS. See Alienation.

of fee simple, 35.

of a deceased person's estate, 36.

of fee tail, 43.

of life estates, 48, 50.

- LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES, 97. See Trust.
- LIEN, 222, 291.
- LIGHT, right to, 276. See Easements.
- LIMITATION, RULES OF, 122.
- LIMITATION, WORDS OF,
 "heirs," &c., 26.
 "successors," 28.
 construction of: Shelley's case, 125.
- LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS, 256. See Long Possession and Prescription.
- LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANIES, 305.
- LIMITED OWNERS, 60. See Settled Land Acts.
- LIS PENDENS, 198.
- LIVERY OF SEISIN, 203. See Alienation.
- LOAN, 290. See Bailment.
- LODGERS' GOODS, 77. See Distress.
- LONG POSSESSION, acquisition by, 255.
 of land, 256.
 none of goods, 256.
 when time begins to run, 257.
 disabilities, 258.
 fraud, 258.
 express trust, 258.
- LUNATICS. See Disabilities.
- MAINTENANCE, 295. See Choses in Action.
- MANOR, 21, 31, 338. See Copyhold.
- MARKET OVERT, sales in, 216.
- MARRIAGE, conditions in restraint of, 163.
 rights of property arising from, 262.
- MARRIED WOMEN, 323. See Disabilities.
- MEMORANDUM IN WRITING, 220.
- MERGER, 71.
- MIDDLESEX REGISTRY, 182, 352.
- MONEY, transfer by delivery, 217.
- MONOPOLIES, 309.
 patents, 310.
 copyright, 312.
 right to perform dramatic, &c. compositions, 314.
 right to trade marks, 315.
 right to trade names, 315.

- MORTGAGES, 165.
 kinds of, 167.
 mortgages of land, 169.
 mortgages of goods, 187.
- MORTGAGES OF GOODS, 187.
 mortgages and pledges, 187.
 Pawnbrokers Acts, 188.
 Bills of Sale Acts, 188.
- MORTGAGES OF LAND, 169.
 A. mortgages by deed, 170.
 position of parties, 170.
 devolution, 171.
 remedies for mortgage interest, 174.
 remedies for mortgage debt, 176.
 redemption of mortgage estate, 179.
 restrictions on right of redemption, 180.
 B. mortgages by deposit or memorandum, 184.
 priority, 185.
 forfeiture of equity of redemption, 186.
- MORTGAGES OF SHIPS, 358.
- MORTMAIN,
 trust of lands to evade Mortmain Acts, 92.
 conveyances to corporations, 330.
 Mortmain and Charitable Uses Acts, 1888—92...332.
- NATIONAL DEBT, 301. See Annuities.
- NATURALISATION ACT, 1870...261, 329. See Aliens.
- NECESSARIES, 322. See Infants.
- NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, bills of exchange, 296.
 meaning of negotiable, 297.
 promissory notes, 297.
 bills of lading, 297.
 exchequer bills, 297.
- NUNCUPATIVE WILL, 232.
- OCCUPANCY, acquiring ownership by, 192.
- OCCUPANTS, special and general, 48.
- ORDER AND DISPOSITION, goods in bankrupt's, 253.
- OUTLAWRY, forfeiture on, 260.
- OWNERSHIP,
 definition of, 2.
 characteristics of, 10.
 absolute and limited, 11.
 of land and goods, 15.
 modes of enjoying ownership, 90.
 modes of acquiring ownership, 191.
 modes of owning incorporeal hereditaments, 275.

PARAMOUNT, LORD, 16.

PARTITION,
 joint tenancy, 108.
 coparcenary, 114.
 tenancy in common, 116.

PARTNERS,
 joint tenants, 106.
 no survivorship, 106.

PATENTS, 310. See Monopolies.

PAWN, 188. See Mortgages of Goods.

PERPETUITIES, rule against, 154.
 applied to powers, 156.

PERSONAL PROPERTY, 6.

PLEDGE, 188. See Mortgages of Goods.

POSSIBILITY, of issue extinct, 42.
 double possibility, 121.
 possibilities of interests, 130.
 alienation of, 132.

POSTHUMOUS CHILDREN, 121.

POWERS,
 of life tenant under Settled Land Acts, 61.
 nature of powers, 146.
 kinds of powers, 146.
 powers of appointment, 147.
 creation of powers, 150.
 execution, 150.
 extinction, 152.
 revocation, 153.

PREScription. See Limitation and Long Possession. of easements, 257, 278.

PRESENTATION, 286. See Advowsons.

PRIVITY OF ESTATE, 76, 210.

PROBATE, of wills, 229.
 Court of, 230.

PROFITS À PRENDRE, 280.

PROTECTOR OF SETTLEMENT, 41.

PUR AUTRE VIE, ESTATE, 48.

PURCHASER, meaning of "purchase," 267.

QUASI ENTAIL, 49.

QUIA EMPTORES, 32.

QUIET ENJOYMENT, covenant for, 201, 209.

QUIT RENT, 23.

BACK-RENT,
sub-tenants holding at, 53, 75.
meaning of, 209.

REALTY, origin of term, 6.
things included under it, 7.

RECEIPT CLAUSE, in conveyance, effect of, 359.
form of, 359.

RECEIVER, power to appoint, of mortgagee, 175.
of debenture holder, 308.

RECITAL, of contract, 359.
of title, 359.

RECOVERIES, 38, 249. See Fine.

RE-ENTRY. See Forfeiture. for condition broken, 72.
severance of condition of, 73.

REGISTRATION, of judgments, 35.
of bills of sale, 189.
of transfers of land, 211.
of joint stock companies, 304.
of patents, 311.
of copyright, 314.
of trade marks, 315.
of ships, 357.
of transfers of ships, 357.
of mortgages of ships, 358.

REGISTRATION OF DEEDS, 182. See Inrolments.

REGISTRATION OF TITLE, 182, 211. See Inrolments.

RELEASE,
conveyance between joint tenants by, 108.
extinguishment of power by, 152.
conveyance by, 205.

REMAINDER,

- distinguished from reversion, 126, 129.
- kinds of remainders, 129.
- vested, 129.
- contingent, 130.
- liability to failure, 132, 144.
- equitable remainders, 138.
- remainders and executory interests, 144.
- Contingent Remainders Act, 144.

RENT,

- quit, 23.
- service, 32.
- seck, 33.
- charge; remedies, 33.
- under Deasy's Act (Ireland), 34.
- remedies for rent, 72, 76.
 - forfeiture, 72.
 - distress, 76.
 - action for payment, 76.
- arrears of, 367.

RESTRAINT ON ANTICIPATION, 320.RESULTING TRUST, 95.*RESULTING USE, 140.*REVERSIONS,

- future interest at common law, 119.
- reversions and remainders distinguished, 126.
- incidents of reversions, 127.

REVOCATION, powers of, 153.RIVER,

- ownership of bed of, 194.
- right of flow of, 276.

RULES OF CONSTRUCTION,

- future interests in freeholds, 124.
- executory interests, 142.
- wills, general rule, 237.
- wills, special rules, 238.

SALE OF GOODS,

- in market overt, 216.
- no writing required, 219.
- exceptions, 219.
- implied condition and warranties, 220.
- when property passes, 221.
- position of vendor, 222.
- position of vendee, 222.

- SALE, POWERS OF,
 tenant for life, 61.
 mortgagee of land, 177.
 mortgagee by deposit, 185.
 mortgagee of goods, 190.
 executors, 247.
 trustee in bankruptcy, 255.
 innkeepers, 292.
- SATISFIED TERMS, 70.
- SEAMEN, wills of, 232.
- SEIGNORY, 280.
- SEISIN,
 the possession of a freeholder, 66.
 must never be without owner, 122.
 livery of seisin, 203.
 copyholds, seisin in lord, 339.
- SEPARATE ESTATE. See Married Women. equitable, 263, 320, 324.
 statutory, 263, 320, 325.
- SERJEANTY, grand and petit, 20.
- SERVIENT TENEMENT, 276. See Easements.
- SETTLED LAND ACTS, object of, 58.
 life tenant under, 60.
 trustees under, 60.
 powers of life tenant, 61.
 conditions governing powers, 62.
 capital money, 63.
- SETTLEMENTS. See Trusts. of freeholds, 55.
 of leaseholds, 80.
 of goods, 85.
- SEVERALTY, 102.
- SEVERANCE, 73, 107, 114, 116.
- SHARES IN JOINT STOCK COMPANIES, 305.
- SHELLEY'S CASE, rule in, 125.
- SHIFTING USES, 144.
- SHIPS,
 aliens and British ships, 329.
 registry of British ships, 357.
 transfers, 357.
 devolution, 357.
 equitable transfers, 358.
 mortgages, 358.

SIMONY, 286.

SOCAGE, tenure in, 20.
free, 22.

SPECIAL OCCUPANT, 43.

SPRINGING USES, 144.

STATUTES. See Table of Statutes.

STOCK, 301, 307.

STOLEN GOODS, SALE OF, 216.

STOP ORDER, 302.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU, 222.

SUBINFEUDATION, 19, 31.

SUCCESSION. See Descent.

SUCCESSION, WORDS OF, 28.

SUFFERANCE, TENANT BY, 79.

SURRENDER,
of leaseholds, 71.
of copyholds, 340.

SURVIVORSHIP, RIGHT OF, 105.

TACKING, 180. See Mortgages.

TAIL, FEE, 37. See Fee Tail.

TALTARUM'S CASE, 39.

TENANCY AT WILL, 78.

TENANCY BY SUFFERANCE, 79.

TENANCY FOR TIME CERTAIN, 68. See Leaseholds.

TENANCY FROM YEAR TO YEAR, 68.

TENEMENTS,
meaning of, 6.
within statute De Donis, 37.
incorporeal tenements, 274.

TENURE, 16.
origin of, 18.
kinds of, 19.
free and customary, 21.
incidents of free, 23.
interest in free, 24.
copyhold, 337.

- TERMS OF YEARS, 69. See Leaseholds.
- TESTAMENT, 225. See Will.
- TESTATUM, 217.
- THELLUSSON ACT, 158. See Accumulations.
- "THINGS REAL, PERSONAL, AND MIXED," 7.
- TIMBER, 51.
- TITHES, 284.
- TITLE, 191.
by original acquisition of ownership, 192.
by transfer of ownership, 194.
- TITLE DEEDS, 17.
- TITLES OF HONOUR, 287.
- TORTS, RIGHTS ARISING FROM, 298.
- TRADE MARKS, 315.
- TRADE NAMES, 315.
- TRANSFER. See Alienation.
- TROVER AND CONVERSION, 289.
- TRUST,
trusts of goods, 86.
trust ownership, 91.
history of, 92.
creation of a trust, 94.
description of trust, 95.
breach of trust, 97.
- TRUSTEE,
not protector of settlement, 41.
trustees under Settled Land Acts, 60.
death of sole trustee, 100.
trustees joint tenants, 112.
- TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY, 252.
- UNLAWFUL CONDITIONS, 161.
- USER, of joint estate, 111.
of estate in coparcenary, 114.
of estate in common, 116.
- USES. See Trust and Executory Interests. rise of uses, 92.
Statute of Uses, 93, 139, 202, 204.
limitations to uses, 141.
springing and shifting uses, 141.

VENDOR'S LIEN, 222. See Lien.

VESTED REMAINDER, 129. See Remainders.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES, 95, 195, 254.

WAIVER OF CONDITION, 73.

WARRANTY on sale of goods, 220.

WASTE, 50.

- voluntary, 50.
- permissive, 52.
- equitable, 52.

WATER, 4, 5, 276, 278.

WIDOW. See Married Women.

- dower, 263.
- share of personalty, 264.
- freebench, 339.

WIDOWHOOD,

- estate during, 46.
- gifts generally, 163.

WILD ANIMALS, 3, 193, 283.

WILL,

- description of, 225.
- history of, 226.
- wills of realty and of personalty, 228.
- execution of, 231.
- domicile and execution, 234.
- republication of, 235.
- revocation of, 236.
- construction of, 237.

YORKSHIRE, registration in, 182.

TELEGRAPHIC ADDRESS—
"RHODRONS, LONDON."

October, 1897.

CATALOGUE OF LAW WORKS
PUBLISHED BY STEVENS AND SONS, LTD.

119 & 120, Chancery Lane, London.

(And at 14, Bell Yard, Lincoln's Inn.)

A Catalogue of Modern Law Works, together with a complete Chronological List of all the English, Irish, and Scotch Reports, an Alphabetical Table of Abbreviations used in reference to Law Reports and Text Books, and an Index of Subjects. Demy 8vo. 1897 (120 pp.), limp binding, post free, 6d.

Acts of Parliament.—Public and Local Acts from an early date may be had of the Publishers of this Catalogue, who have also on sale the largest collection of Private Acts, relating to Estates, Enclosures, Railways, Roads, &c., &c.

ADMIRALTY.—Roscoe's Admiralty Practice.—Third Edition. By E. S. ROSCOE, Assistant Registrar, Admiralty Court, and T. LAMBERT MEARS, Esqrs., Barrister-at-Law. [In preparation.]

ADULTERATION.—Bartley's Adulteration of Food.—Statutes and Cases dealing with Coffee, Tea, Bread, Seeds, Food and Drugs, Margarine, Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs, &c., &c. By DOUGLAS C. BARTLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Roy. 12mo. 1895. 6s.

Cripps-Day's Adulteration (Agricultural Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs).—By FRANCIS H. CRIPPS-DAY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1894. 5s.

ADVOCACY.—Harris' Hints on Advocacy.—Conduct of Cases, Civil and Criminal. Classes of Witnesses and Suggestions for Cross-examining them, &c., &c. By RICHARD HARRIS, one of her Majesty's Counsel. Eleventh Edition, with an Introduction. Royal 12mo. 1897. 7s. 6d.

"Full of good sense and just observation. A very complete Manual of the Advocate's art in Trial by Jury."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Deserves to be carefully read by the young barrister whose career is yet before him."—Law Magazine.

AFFILIATION.—Bott's Manual of the Law and Practice in Affiliation Proceedings, with Statutes and Forms, Table of Gestation, Forms of Agreement, &c. By W. HOLLOWAY BOTT, Solicitor. Demy 12mo. 1894. 6s.

* * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

▲

- CANALS.—Webster's Law Relating to Canals.—By ROBERT G. WEBSTER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1885. 17. 1s.
- CARDINAL RULES.—See "Legal Interpretation."
- CARRIERS.—Carver's Treatise on the Law relating to the Carriage of Goods by Sea.—Second Edition. By THOMAS GILBERT CARVER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1891. 17. 12s.
"A recognized authority."—Solicitors' Journal.
"A careful and accurate treatise."—Law Quarterly Review.
- Macnamara's Digest of the Law of Carriers of Goods and Passengers by Land and Internal Navigation.—By WALTER HENRY MACNAMARA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Registrar to the Railway Commission. Royal 8vo. 1888. 17. 8s.
"A complete epitome of the law relating to carriers of every class."—Railway Press.
- CHAMBER PRACTICE.—Archibald's Practice at Judges' Chambers and in the District Registries; with Forms of Summonses and Orders. Second Edition. By W. F. A. ARCHIBALD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and P. E. VIEARD, of the Summons and Order Department. Royal 12mo. 1886. 15s.
- CHANCERY, and Vide "Equity."
Daniell's Chancery Practice.—The Practice of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice and on appeal therefrom. Sixth Edit. By L. FIELD, E. O. DUNN, and T. RUSTON, assisted by W. H. UPJOHN, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. in 3 parts. 8vo. 1882-84. 67. 6s.
- Daniell's Forms and Precedents of Proceedings in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice and on Appeal therefrom. Fourth Edition. With Summaries of the Rules of the Supreme Court, Practical Notes and References to the Sixth Edition of "Daniell's Chancery Practice." By CHARLES BURNETT, B.A. Oxon., a Master of the Supreme Court. Royal 8vo. 1885. 27. 10s.
- CHARITABLE TRUSTS.—Mitcheson's Charitable Trusts.—The Jurisdiction of the Charity Commission. By RICHARD EDMUND MITCHESON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1887. 18s.
- CHARTER PARTIES.—Carver.—Vide "Carriers."
Leggett's Treatise on the Law of Charter Parties.—By EUGENE LEGGETT, Solicitor and Notary Public. Demy 8vo. 1894. 25s.
- CHILDREN.—Hall's Law Relating to Children. By W. CLARKE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1894. 4s.
- CHURCH LAW.—Whitehead's Church Law.—Being a Concise Dictionary of Statutes, Canons, Regulations, and Decided Cases affecting the Clergy and Laity. By BENJAMIN WHITEHEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1892. 10s. 6d.
"A perfect mine of learning on all topics ecclesiastical."—Daily Telegraph.
 The Statutes relating to Church and Clergy (reprinted from "Chitty's Statutes"), with Preface and Index. By BENJAMIN WHITEHEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1894. 6s.
- CIVIL ENGINEERS.—Macassey and Strahan's Law relating to Civil Engineers, Architects and Contractors.—With a Chapter on Arbitrations. Second Edition. By L. LIVINGSTON MACASSEY and J. A. STRAHAN, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. 12s. 6d.
"Contains a statement of law and usage which is at once full and reliable."—Solicitors' Journal, July 10, 1897.
- COLLISIONS.—Marsden's Treatise on the Law of Collisions at Sea.—Fourth Edition. By REGINALD G. MARSDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. 17. 8s.
"Clear in statement and careful in summarizing the results of decisions."—Solicitors' Journal.

. All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

COMMERCIAL LAW.—The French Code of Commerce.—By L. GOBERND, Licencié en droit. Demy 8vo. 1880. Reduced to net, 12s.

COMMON LAW.—Chitty's Archbold's Practice. Fourteenth Edition. By THOMAS WILLES CHITTY, assisted by J. ST. L. LESLIE, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. 1885. (Published at 3l. 13s. 6d.) Reduced to net, 30s.

Chitty's Forms.—Vide "Forms."

Fisher's Digest of Reported Decisions from 1756 to 1883. Compiled and arranged by JOHN MEWS, assisted by C. M. CHAPMAN, HARRY H. W. SPARHAM and A. H. TODD, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. 7 vols. Royal 8vo. 1884.

(Published at 12l. 12s.) Reduced to net, 5l. 5s.

Mews' Consolidated Digest of all the Reports in all the Courts, for the years 1884–88, inclusive. By JOHN MEWS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Roy. 8vo. 1889. (Pub. at 1l. 11s. 6d.) Reduced to net, 15s.

The Annual Digest for 1896. By JOHN MEWS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1897. 16s.

Pollock and Wright's Possession in the Common Law.—Parts I. and II. by Sir F. POLLOCK, Bart., Barrister-at-Law Part III. by R. S. WRIGHT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 8vo. 1888. 8s. 6d.

Shirley.—Vide "Leading Cases."

Smith's Manual of Common Law.—For Practitioners and Students. Comprising the Fundamental Principles, with useful Practical Rules and Decisions. By JOSIAH W. SMITH, B.C.L., Q.C. Tenth Edition. By J. TRUBNAM, LL.M., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 12mo. 1887. 14s.

COMPANY LAW.—Hamilton's Manual of Company Law. By WILLIAM FREDERICK HAMILTON, LL.D. (Lond.), assisted by K. G. METCALFE, M.A., Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1891. 12s. 6d.

Palmer's Private Companies and Syndicates, their Formation and Advantages; being a Concise Popular Statement of the Mode of Converting a Business into a Private Company, and of establishing and working Private Companies and Syndicates for Miscellaneous Purposes. Thirteenth Edition. By F. B. PALMER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 12mo. 1897. Net, 1s.

Palmer.—Vide "Conveyancing" and "Winding-up."

Palmer's Shareholders, Directors, and Voluntary Liquidators' Legal Companion.—A Manual of Every-day Law and Practice for Promoters, Shareholders, Directors, Secretaries, Creditors, Solicitors, and Voluntary Liquidators of Companies under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, with Appendix of useful Forms. Seventeenth edit. By F. B. PALMER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 12mo. 1897. Net, 2s. 6d.

Street's Law relating to Public Statutory Undertakings: comprising Railway Companies, Water, Gas, and Canal Companies, Harbours, Docks, &c., with special reference to Modern Decisions. By J. BAMFIELD STREET, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1890. 10s. 6d.

COMPENSATION.—Cripps' Treatise on the Principles of the Law of Compensation. Third Edition. By C. A. CRIPPS, Esq., Q.C. Demy 8vo. 1892. 20s.

"An accurate exposition of the law."—Law Journal.

COMPOSITION DEEDS.—Lawrance.—Vide "Bankruptcy."

CONDITIONS OF SALE.—Webster.—Vide "Vendors and Purchasers."

* * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.—Dicey's Digest of the Law of England with reference to the Conflict of Laws.—By A. V. DICEY, Esq., Q.C., B.C.L. With Notes of American Cases, by Professor MOORE. Royal 8vo. 1896. 11. 10s.

"One of the most valuable books on English law which has appeared for some time. Thorough and minute in the treatment of the subject, cautious and judicial in spirit, this work is obviously the result of protracted labour."—The Times.

CONSIDERATION.—Jenks' History of the Doctrine of Consideration.—By EDWARD JENKS, Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo. 1892. 3s. 6d.

CONSTITUTION.—Anson's Law and Custom of the Constitution. By Sir WILLIAM R. ANSON, Bart., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. Part I. Parliament. Second Edition. 1892. 12s. 6d.

Part II. The Crown. Second Edition. 1896. 14s.

CONTRACT OF SALE.—Blackburn.—Idem "Sales."

Moyle's Contract of Sale in the Civil Law.—By J. B. MOYLE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 8vo. 1892. 10s. 6d.

CONTRACTS.—Addison on Contracts.—A Treatise on the Law of Contracts. 9th Edit. By HORACE SMITH, Esq., Benchor of the Inner Temple, Metropolitan Magistrate, assisted by A. P. PERCEVAL KEEPE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1892. 21. 10s.

"This and the companion treatise on the law of torts are the most complete works on these subjects, and form an almost indispensable part of every lawyer's library."—Law Journal.

Anson's Principles of the English Law of Contract.—By Sir W. R. ANSON, Bart., Barrister-at-Law. Eighth Edit. 1895. 10s. 6d.

Finch's Selection of Cases on the English Law of Contract.—Second Edition. Roy. 8vo. 1896. 28s.

Fry.—Idem "Specific Performance."

Leake's Law of Contracts.—A Digest of Principles of the Law of Contracts. Third Edition. By STEPHEN MARTIN LEAKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1892. 32s.

"Complete, accurate, and easy of reference."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Clear, concise, accurate, and exhaustive."—Law Times.

Pollock's Principles of Contract.—Being a Treatise on the General Principles relating to the Validity of Agreements in the Law of England. Sixth Edition. By Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The Law of Torts," "Digest of the Law of Partnership," &c. Demy 8vo. 1894. 28s.

"A work which, in our opinion, shows great ability, a discerning intellect, a comprehensive mind, and painstaking industry."—Law Journal.

CONVEYANCING.—Dart.—Idem "Vendors and Purchasers."

Dickins' Precedents of General Requisitions on Title, with Explanatory Notes and Observations. By HERBERT A. DICKINS, Esq., Solicitor. Royal 12mo. 1896. 5s.

"We cannot do better than advise every lawyer with a conveyancing practice to purchase the little book and place it on his shelves forthwith."—Law Notes.

Greenwood's Manual of the Practice of Conveyancing, showing the present Practice relating to the daily routine of Conveyancing in Solicitors' Offices. To which are added Concise Common Forms in Conveyancing.—Ninth Edit. Edited by HARRY GREENWOOD, M.A., LL.D., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Roy. 8vo. 1897. 20s.

"We should like to see it placed by his principal in the hands of every articulated clerk. One of the most useful practical works we have ever seen."—Law Students' Journal.

Morris's Patents Conveyancing.—Being a Collection of Precedents in Conveyancing in relation to Letters Patent for Inventions. With Dissertations and Copious Notes on the Law and Practice. By ROBERT MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1887. 11. 5s.

* * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

CONVEYANCING—continued.

Palmer's Company Precedents.—For use in relation to Companies subject to the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890.

PART I. COMPANY FORMS. Arranged as follows:—Promoters, Prospectus, Agreements, Underwriting, Memoranda and Articles of Association, Private Companies, Employés' Benefits, Resolutions, Notices, Certificates, Powers of Attorney, Debentures and Debenture Stock, Banking and Advance Securities, Petitions, Writs, Pleadings, Judgments and Orders, Reconstruction, Amalgamation, Special Acts. With Copious Notes and an Appendix containing the Acts and Rules. Sixth Edition. By FRANCIS BEAUFORT PALMER, assisted by CHARLES MACNAGHTEN and ARTHUR JOHN CHITTY, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1895. 1*l.* 16*s.*

"No company lawyer can afford to be without it."—Law Journal.

PART II. WINDING-UP FORMS AND PRACTICE. Arranged as follows:—Compulsory Winding-Up, Voluntary Winding-Up, Winding-Up under Supervision, Arrangements and Compromises, with a Chapter on Debentures, and Copious Notes, and an Appendix of Acts and Rules. Seventh Edition. By FRANCIS BEAUFORT PALMER, assisted by FRANK EVANS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Roy. 8vo. 1897. 32*s.*

"Palmer's 'Company Precedents' is the book par excellence for practitioners. There is nothing we can think of which should be within the covers which we do not find."—Law Journal.

Prideaux's Precedents in Conveyancing—With Dissertations on its Law and Practice. 16th Edit. By JOHN WHITCOMBE and BETHUNE HORSBUGH, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 1895. 3*l.* 10*s.*

"Prideaux" is the best work on Conveyancing."—Law Journal.

"Accurate, concise, clear, and comprehensive in scope, and we know of no treatise upon Conveyancing which is so generally useful to the practitioner."—Law Times.

Turner's Duties of Solicitor to Client as to Partnership Agreements, Leases, Settlements, and Wills.—By EDWARD F. TURNER, Solicitor. Demy 8vo. 1884. 10*s.* 6*d.*

COPYHOLD.—The Copyhold Act, 1894.—With a short Introduction, Notes, and Index.—By W. A. PECK, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1894. Net, 1*s.* 6*d.*

CORONERS.—Jervis on the Office and Duties of Coroners.—With Forms and Precedents. By R. E. MELSHAMMER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Fifth Edition. Post 8vo. 1888. 10*s.* 6*d.*

COSTS.—Johnson's Bills of Costs in the High Court of Justice and Court of Appeal, in the House of Lords and the Privy Council; with the Scales of Costs and Tables of Fees in use in the Houses of Lords and Commons, relative to Private Bills; Election Petitions, Parliamentary and Municipal. Inquiries and Arbitrations under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act and other Arbitrations. Proceedings in the Court of the Railway and Canal Commission, in the County Court and the Mayor's Courts. The Scales of Costs and Tables of Fees in use in the Court of Passage, Liverpool, and Conveyancing Costs; with Orders and Rules as to Costs and Court Fees, and Notes and Decisions relating thereto. By HORACE MAXWELL JOHNSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1897. 1*l.* 12*s.*

"It is difficult to conceive how any costs clerk or solicitor can go wrong with a work of this kind to guide him."—Law Times, April 10th, 1897.

"We consider the book marvellously accurate, and we are able to commend it in all confidence. On the law of bills of costs the practitioner, let his business be as wide as it may, wants nothing but such a work as the one before us."—Law Notes, May, 1897.

•• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

COSTS—continued.

Summerhays and Toogood's Precedents of Bills of Costs. Seventh Edition. By THORNTON TOOGOOD, THOMAS CHARLES TOOGOOD, and C. GILBERT BARBER, Solicitors. Royal 8vo. 1896. 1l. 10s.

Webster's Parliamentary Costs.—Private Bills, Election Petitions, Appeals, House of Lords. Fourth Edition. By C. CAVANAGE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo. 1881. 20s.

COUNTY COUNCILS.—Bazalgette and Humphreys, Chambers. —Vide "Local and Municipal Government."

COUNTY COURT APPEALS.—Chamier's Law and Practice relating to County Court Appeals; Mandamus, Prohibition, and Certiorari. By DANIEL CHAMIER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1896. 10s.

COUNTY COURTS.—The Annual County Court Practice. —Founded on POLLOCK and NICOL's and HEYWOOD's Practices of the County Courts. Containing the Jurisdiction and Practice under the County Courts Act, the Bills of Exchange Act, and the Employers' Liability Act, and the Statutes, Rules of Practice, Forms, and Tables of Fees and Costs, &c. By His Honour Judge SMYLY, Q.C. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. (Ready in December.) 1l. 6s.

COVENANTS.—Hamilton's Concise Treatise on the Law of Covenants. —By G. BALDWIN HAMILTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1888. 7s. 6d.

CRIMINAL LAW.—Archbold's Pleading and Evidence in Criminal Cases. —With the Statutes, Precedents of Indictments, &c. Twenty-first Edition. By WILLIAM BRUCE, Esq., Stipendiary Magistrate for Leeds. Royal 12mo. 1893. 1l. 11s. 6d.

Chitty's Collection of Statutes relating to Criminal Law. —(Reprinted from "Chitty's Statutes.") With an Introduction and Index. By W. F. CRAIG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1894. 10s.

Disney and Gundry's Criminal Law. —A Sketch of its Principles and Practice. By HENRY W. DISNEY and HAROLD GUNDEY, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1895. 7s. 6d.

"We think we have here just what students want. The work is based upon a perfect knowledge of the statute law, and is compiled from the best and most recent authorities."—Law Times.

Kershaw's Brief Aids to Criminal Law.—With Notes on the Procedure and Evidence. By HILTON KERSHAW, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1897. 3s.

Roscoe's Digest of the Law of Evidence in Criminal Cases.—Eleventh Edition. By HORACE SMITH and GILBERT GEORGE KENNEDY, Esqrs., Metropolitan Magistrates. Demy 8vo. 1890. 1l. 11s. 6d.

"To the criminal lawyer it is his guide, philosopher and friend. What Roscoe says most judges will accept without question."—Law Times.

Russell's Treatise on Crimes and Misdemeanors.—Sixth Edit. By HORACE SMITH, Esq., Metropolitan Police Magistrate, and A. P. PERCEVAL KEEP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 3 vols. Roy. 8vo. 1896. 6l. 15s. 6d.

"No library can be said to be complete without the new edition of Russell on Crimes."—Law Times.

"Indispensable in every Court of criminal justice here and in our Colonies."—The Times.

"No more trustworthy authority, or more exhaustive expositor, than 'Russell' can be consulted."—Law Magazine and Review.

Shirley's Sketch of the Criminal Law.—By W. S. SHIRLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. By CHARLES STEPHEN HUNTER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1889. 7s. 6d.

Warburton.—Vide "Leading Cases." Thring.—Vide "Navy."

. All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

DEATH DUTIES.—Freeth's Acts relating to the New Death Duty, called the Estate Duty, with an Introduction dealing with the other Death Duties, A Digest, Copious Notes, and an Appendix containing the Estate Duty Forms, and the Rules regulating Proceedings in England and Ireland in Appeals under the Acts. Second Edition. By EVELYN FREETH, Esq., Deputy-Controller of Legacy and Succession Duties. Demy 8vo. 1897. 12s. 6d.

"The official position of the Author renders his opinion on questions of procedure of great value, and we think that this book will be found very useful to solicitors who have to prepare accounts for duty."—Solicitors' Journal.

Harman's Finance Act, 1894, so far as it relates to the Death Duties With an Introduction and Notes, and an Appendix of Forms. By J. E. HARMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1894. 5s.

DECISIONS OF SIR GEORGE JESSEL.—Peter's Analysis and Digest of the Decisions of Sir George Jessel; with Notes, &c. By ARSLEY PETER PETER, Solicitor. Demy 8vo. 1883. 16s.

DIARY.—Lawyers' Companion (The) and Diary, and London and Provincial Law Directory for 1898.—For the use of the Legal Profession, Public Companies, Justices, Merchants, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, &c., &c. Edited by EDWIN LAYMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law; and contains Tables of Costs in the High Court of Judicature and County Court, &c.; Monthly Diary of County, Local Government, and Parish Business; Oaths in Supreme Court; Summary of Statutes of 1897; Alphabetical Index to the Practical Statutes since 1820; Schedule of Stamp Duties; Legal Time, Interest, Discount, Income, Wages and other Tables; the New Death Duties; and a variety of matters of practical utility: together with a complete List of the English Bar, and London and Country Solicitors, with date of admission and appointments. PUBLISHED ANNUALLY. Fifty-second Issue. (Ready in October.)

Issued in the following forms, octavo size, strongly bound in cloth:—

- | | |
|------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|
| 1. Two days on a page, plain | 5s.0d. |
| 2. The above, INTERLEAVED for ATTENDANCES | 7 0 |
| 3. Two days on a page, ruled, with or without money columns | 5 6 |
| 4. The above, with money columns, INTERLEAVED for ATTENDANCES | 8 0 |
| 5. Whole page for each day, plain | 7 6 |
| 6. The above, INTERLEAVED for ATTENDANCES | 9 6 |
| 7. Whole page for each day, ruled, with or without money columns | 8 6 |
| 8. The above, INTERLEAVED for ATTENDANCES | 10 6 |
| 9. Three days on a page, ruled blue lines, without money columns | 3 6 |

The Diary contains memoranda of Legal Business throughout the Year, with an Index for ready reference.

A new feature in this issue will be that the name of the County Court at each place has been added.

"The amount of information packed within the covers of this well-known book of reference is almost incredible. In addition to the Diary, it contains nearly 800 pages of closely printed matter, none of which could be omitted without, perhaps, detracting from the usefulness of the book. The publishers seem to have made it their aim to include in the Companion every item of information which the most exacting lawyer could reasonably expect to find in its pages, and it may safely be said that no practising solicitor, who has experienced the luxury of having it at his elbow, will ever be likely to try to do without it."—Law Journal.

* * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock in law calf and other bindings.

DICTIONARY.—The Pocket Law Lexicon.—Explaining Technical Words, Phrases and Maxims of the English, Scotch and Roman Law, to which is added a complete List of Law Reports, with their Abbreviations. Third Edit. By HENRY G. RAWSON and JAMES F. REYNARD, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Fosp. 8vo. 1893. 6s. 6d.

"A wonderful little legal Dictionary."—Indermaur's Law Students' Journal.

Wharton's Law Lexicon.—Forming an Epitome of the Law of England, and containing full Explanations of the Technical Terms and Phrases thereof, both Ancient and Modern; including the various Legal Terms used in Commercial Business. Together with a Translation of the Latin Law Maxims and selected Titles from the Civil, Scotch and Indian Law. Ninth Edition. By J. M. LEXY, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Super-royal 8vo. 1892. 17. 18s.

"On almost every point both student and practitioner can gather information from this invaluable book, which ought to be in every lawyer's office."—Gibson's Law Notes.

"One of the first books which every articulated clerk and bar student should procure."—Law Students' Journal.

DIGESTS.—Campbell's Ruling Cases.—Arranged, Annotated, and Edited by ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Advocate of the Scotch Bar, assisted by other Members of the Bar. With American Notes by IRVING BROWNE, formerly Editor of the American Reports. Vols. I. to XII. ABANDONMENT—INDEMNITY. Royal 8vo. 1894-1897. Half vellum, gilt top, net, each 25s.

Vol. XIII.—INFANT TO INSURANCE. (Nearly ready.)

Subscription for Five Volumes, paid in advance, £1 per Volume.

An Addendum, containing, under the appropriate title and rule, Notes of Cases published since the issue of Volume I., together with a complete Index of Cases and a general Index to the first 10 Volumes, thus bringing all the Volumes up to date. (Now ready.) Royal 8vo. 1897. Half vellum, net, 20s.

To Subscribers to the Work, 10s.

PLAN OF THE WORK.

It is intended in this Work to collect and arrange in alphabetical order of subjects all the useful authorities of English Case Law from the earliest period to the present time on points of general application.

The matter under each alphabetical heading is arranged in sections, in an order indicated at the commencement of the heading. The more important and Ruling Cases are set forth at length, subject only to abridgment where the original report is unnecessarily diffuse. The effect of the less important or subordinate cases is stated briefly in the Notes.

The aim of the Work is to furnish the practitioner with English Case Law in such a form that he will readily find the information he requires for ordinary purposes. The Ruling Case will inform him, or refresh his memory, as to the principles; and the Notes will show in detail how the principles have been applied or modified in other cases.

It is estimated that the Work will be completed in about 25 Volumes.

"The rapidity and fulness which mark this compilation are remarkable. As the work grows it is seen to be a perfect storehouse of the principles established and illustrated by our case law and that of the United States."—Law Times.

"The general scheme appears to be excellent, and its execution reflects the greatest credit on everybody concerned. It may, indeed, be said to constitute, for the present, the high-water mark of the science of book-making."—Sat. Rev.

"By this time this series has become so widely known, and doubtless appreciated, that it becomes unnecessary to do much more than chronicle the appearance of the new volume, to state the contents, and to say that its workmanship is quite up to the former level."—Law Journal.

"A Cyclopaedia of law . . . most ably executed, learned, accurate, clear, concise; but perhaps its chief merit is that it impresses on us what the practising English lawyer is too apt to forget—that English law really is a body of principles."—The British Review.

* * * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

DIGESTS—continued.

Chitty's Index to all the Reported Cases decided in the several Courts of Equity in England, the Privy Council, and the House of Lords, with a selection of Irish Cases. Fourth Edition. By HENRY EDWARD HIRST, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 9 vols. Roy. 8vo. 1883-89. (Published at 12l. 12s.) Reduced to net, 6l. 6s.

. The volumes sold separately. Each net, 16s.

Dale and Lehmann's Digest of Cases, Overruled, Not Followed, Disapproved, Approved, Distinguished, Commented on and specially considered in the English Courts from the Year 1756 to 1886 inclusive, and a complete Index of the Cases, in which are included all Cases reversed from the year 1856. By CHAS. WM. MITCALFE DALE, and RUDOLF CHAMBERS LEHMANN, assisted by CHAS. H. L. NIXIE, and HERBERT H. CHILD, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1887. (Published at 2l. 10s.) Reduced to net, 25s.

Fisher's Digest of the Reported Decisions of the Courts of Common Law, Bankruptcy, Probate, Admiralty, and Divorce, together with a Selection from those of the Court of Chancery and Irish Courts from 1756 to 1883 inclusive. By J. MEWS, assisted by C. M. CHAPMAN, H. H. W. SPARHAM, and A. H. TONN, Esqrs. 7 vols. Roy. 8vo. 1884. (Published at 12l. 12s.) Reduced to net, 6l. 6s.
"To the common lawyer it is the most useful work he can possess."—Law Times.

Mews' Consolidated Digest of all the Reports in all the Courts, for the Years 1884-88 inclusive.—By J. MEWS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1889. (Published at 3ls. 6d.) Reduced to net, 15s.

The Annual Digest for 1896. By JOHN MEWS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1897. 15s.

. This Digest will in future, commencing with 1897, be also issued quarterly, each part being cumulative. Price to Subscribers, payable in advance, net 17s.

Law Journal Quinquennial Digest, 1890-95.—An Analytical Digest of Cases Published in the Law Journal Reports, and the Law Reports, from Michaelmas Sittings, 1890, to Trinity Sittings, 1895. By GEORGE A. STREETEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 1896. 1l. 10s.

. To Subscribers to the Law Journal Reports, net 5s., postage 6d. extra.

"Extremely well done, with abundance of headings and cross references . . . could not be done better."—Law Times.

Talbot and Fort's Index of Cases Judicially noticed (1865-1890): being a List of all Cases cited in Judgments reported from Michaelmas Term, 1865 to the end of 1890, with the places where they are so cited.—By GEORGE JOHN TALBOT and HUGH FORT, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1891. 25s.

"This is an invaluable tool for the worker among cases."—Solicitors' Journal.

DISCOVERY.—Sichel and Chance's Discovery.—The Law relating to Interrogatories, Production, Inspection of Documents, and Discovery, as well in the Superior as in the Inferior Courts, together with an Appendix of the Acts, Forms and Orders. By WALTER S. SICHEL, and WILLIAM CHANCE, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1883. 12s.

DISTRESS.—Oldham and Foster on the Law of Distress.—A Treatise on the Law of Distress, with an Appendix of Forms, Table of Statutes, &c. Second Edition. By ARTHUR OLDHAM and A. LA TROBE FOSTER, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1889. 18s.

. All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

DISTRICT COUNCILS.—Chambers' Digest of the Law relating to District Councils, so far as regards the Constitution, Powers and Duties of such Councils (including Municipal Corporations) in the matter of Public Health and Local Government. Ninth Edition. —By GEORGE F. CHAMBERS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1895. 10s.

DIVORCE.—Browne and Powles' Law and Practice in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. Sixth Edition. By L. D. POWLES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. (Just ready.) 25s.

"The practitioner's standard work on divorce practice."—Law Quar. Rev.

Kelly's French Law.—Vide "Marriage."

DOGS.—Lupton's Law relating to Dogs.—By FREDERICK LUPTON, Solicitor. Royal 12mo. 1888. 5s.

DOMESDAY BOOK AND BEYOND.—Three Essays in the Early History of England. By Professor MATTLAND, LL.D. 1897. 15s.

EASEMENTS.—Goddard's Treatise on the Law of Easements.—By JOHN LEYBOURN GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Fifth Edition. Demy 8vo. 1896. 11. 5s.

"Has taken its place as a standard treatise by virtue of that best evidence of merit, the favour of those for whom it was written."—J. of British Architects.

"Nowhere has the subject been treated so exhaustively, and, we may add, so scientifically, as by Mr. Goddard. We recommend it to the most careful study of the law student, as well as to the library of the practitioner."—Law Times.

Innes' Digest of the Law of Easements. Fifth Edition. By L. C. INNES, lately one of the Judges of Her Majesty's High Court of Judicature, Madras. Royal 12mo. 1895. 7s. 6d.

"Constructed with considerable care and pains."—Law Journal.

"We have only the pleasing duty remaining of recommending the book to those in search of a concise treatise on the law of Easements."—Law Notes.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.—Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England. By the late Sir ROBERT PHILLIMORE, Bart., D.C.L. Second Edition, by his son Sir WALTER GEORGE FRANK PHILLIMORE, Bart., D.C.L., assisted by C. F. JEMMETT, B.C.L., LL.M., Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 1895. 3l. 3s.

"The famous treatise of Sir Robert Phillimore will continue to hold a foremost place in our legal literature."—Law Times.

"The task of re-editing Phillimore's 'Ecclesiastical Law' was not an easy one. Sir Walter Phillimore has executed it with brilliant success. He has brought to the work all his father's subdued enthusiasm for the Church, he has omitted nothing that lent value to the original treatise, he has expunged from it what could be spared, and has added to it everything that the ecclesiastical lawyer can possibly need to know, pouring a flood of luminous learning on the newer ecclesiastical problems with which he deals."—Law Journal.

Whitehead.—Vide "Church Law."

ELECTION IN EQUITY.—Serrell's Equitable Doctrine of Election. By GEORGE SERRELL, M.A., LL.D., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1891. 7s. 6d.

ELECTIONS.—Day's Election Cases in 1892 and 1893.—Being a Collection of the Points of Law and Practice, together with Reports of the Judgments. By S. H. DAY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Editor of "Rogers on Elections." Royal 12mo. 1894. 7s. 6d.

Hedderwick's Parliamentary Election Manual: A Practical Handbook on the Law and Conduct of Parliamentary Elections in Great Britain and Ireland, designed for the Instruction and Guidance of Candidates, Agents, Canvassers, Volunteer Assistants, &c. By T. C. H. HEDDERWICK, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 12mo. 1892. 7s. 6d.

"Clear and well arranged."—Law Quarterly Review.

. All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

ELECTIONS—continued.Rogers' Law and Practice of Elections.—

Vol. I. REGISTRATION, including the Practice in Registration Appeals; Parliamentary, Municipal, and Local Government; with Appendices of Statutes, Orders in Council, and Forms. Sixteenth Edition. By MAURICE POWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1897. 11. 1s.

A new feature of this edition is that the date of each case is stated with its reference. Several additional Forms will be found in Appendix III., and the General Index has been considerably enlarged.

"The practitioner will find within these covers everything which he can be expected to know, well arranged and carefully stated."—Law Times.

Vol. II. PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS AND PETITIONS; with Appendices of Statutes, Rules and Forms. Seventeenth Edition. By S. H. DAY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1895. 11. 1s.

"The leading book on the difficult subjects of elections and election petitions."—Law Times.

"A very satisfactory treatise on election law . . ."—Solicitors' Journal.

Vol. III. MUNICIPAL AND OTHER ELECTIONS AND PETITIONS, with Appendices of Statutes, Rules, and Forms. Seventeenth Edit. By SAMUEL H. DAY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1894. 11. 1s.

This Volume treats of Elections to Municipal Councils (including the City of London), County Councils, Parish Councils, Rural and Urban District Councils, Boards of Guardians (within and without London), Metropolitan Vestries, School Boards.

ENGLISH LAW.—Pollock and Maitland's History of English Law before the time of Edward I.—By Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., and FRED. W. MAITLAND, Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. roy. 8vo. 1895. 21.

EQUITY, and Vide CHANCERY.

Seton's Forms of Judgments and Orders in the High Court of Justice and in the Court of Appeal, having especial reference to the Chancery Division, with Practical Notes. Fifth Edition. By CECIL C. M. DALE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and W. CROWES, Esq., a Registrar of the Supreme Court. In 3 vols. Royal 8vo. 1891–3. 61.

•• The Volumes sold separately, 21. each.

"A monument of learned and laborious accuracy."—Law Quarterly Review.

"Seton in its new guise is well up to the character which it has for so many years sustained of being the best book of forms of judgment."—Law Times.

Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence.—A Manual of Equity Jurisprudence for Practitioners and Students, founded on the Works of Story, Spence, and other writers, comprising the Fundamental Principles and the points of Equity usually occurring in General Practice. By JOSIAH W. SMITH, Q.C. Fourteenth Edition. By J. TRUSTRUM, LL.M., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 12mo. 1889. 12s. 6d.

Smith's Practical Exposition of the Principles of Equity, illustrated by the Leading Decisions thereon. For the use of Students and Practitioners. Second Edition. By H. ARTHUR SMITH, M.A., LL.B., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1888. 21s.

"Contains a mass of information well arranged, and is illustrated by all the leading decisions."—Law Times.

ESTOPPEL.—Everest and Strode's Law of Estoppel. By LANCELOT FIELDING EVEREST, and EDMUND STRODE, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1884. 18s.

EVIDENCE.—Wills' Theory and Practice of the Law of Evidence.—By Wm. WILLS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1894. 10s. 6d.

"It contains a large amount of valuable information, very tersely and accurately conveyed."—Law Times.

"We consider that Mr. Wills has given the profession a useful book on a difficult subject."—Law Notes.

•• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

EVIDENCE ON COMMISSION.—Hume-Williams and Macklin's Taking of Evidence on Commission: including therein Special Examinations, Letters of Request, Mandamus and Examinations before an Examiner of the Court. By W. E. HUME-WILLIAMS and A. ROMER MACKLIN, Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1895. 12s. 6d.

EXAMINATION GUIDES.—Bar Examination Guide. By H. D. WOODCOCK, and G. H. B. KENRICK, Esqs., Barristers-at-Law. Published after each Examination. Net 2s. 6d.

Bar Examination Guide—Lecture Supplement, 1896. Net 2s.

Haynes and Nelham's Honours Examination Digest. By JOHN F. HAYNES, LL.D., and THOMAS A. NELHAM, Solicitor. Demy 8vo. 1883. 16s.

Napier & Stephenson's Digest of the Subjects of Probate, Divorce, Bankruptcy, Admiralty, Ecclesiastical and Criminal Law necessary to be known for the Final Examination, done into Questions and Answers. By T. BATEMAN NAPIER and RICHARD M. STEPHENSON, Esqs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1888. 12s.

Napier & Stephenson's Digest of the Leading Points in the Subject of Criminal Law. Done into Questions and Answers. By T. BATEMAN NAPIER and RICHARD M. STEPHENSON, Esqs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1888. 6s.

Shearwood's Guide for Candidates for the Professions of Barrister and Solicitor.—Second Edition. By JOSEPH A. SHEARWOOD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1887. 6s.

Uttley's How to Become a Solicitor; or, Hints for Articled Clerks. By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor. Royal 12mo. 1894. 5s.

EXECUTIONS.—Edwards' Law of Execution upon Judgments and Orders of the Chancery and Queen's Bench Divisions of the High Court of Justice.—By C. JOHNSTON EDWARDS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1888. 16s.

EXECUTORS.—Macaskie's Treatise on the Law of Executors and Administrators, and of the Administration of the Estates of Deceased Persons. With an Appendix of Statutes and Forms. By S. C. MACASKIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 8vo. 1881. 10s. 6d.

Williams' Law of Executors and Administrators.—Ninth Edition. By the Hon. Sir ROLAND VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, a Justice of the High Court. 2 vols. Roy. 8vo. 1893. 3l. 16s.

"We can conscientiously say that the present edition will not only sustain, but enhance the high reputation which the book has always enjoyed. The want of a new edition has been distinctly felt for some time, and in this work, and in this work only, will the practitioner now find the entire law relating to executors and administrators treated in an exhaustive and authoritative fashion, and thoroughly brought down to the present date."—Law Journal.

EXTRADITION.—Kirchner's L'Extradition.—Recueil Renfermant in Extensio tous les Traités conclus jusqu'au 1er Janvier, 1883, entre les Nations civilisées, et donnant la solution précise des difficultés qui peuvent surgir dans leur application. Avec une Préface de M. GEORGES LACHAUD, Avocat à la Cour d'Appel de Paris. Publié sous les auspices de M. C. E. HOWARD VINCENT, Directeur des Affaires Criminelles de la Police Métropolitaine de Londres. Par F. J. KIRCHNER, Attaché à la Direction des Affaires Criminelles. In 1 vol. (1150 pp.). Royal 8vo. 1883. 2l. 2s.

•• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

FARM, LAW OF.—Dixon's Law of the Farm: including the Cases and Statutes relating to the subject; and the Agricultural Customs of England and Wales. Fifth Edition. By AUBREY J. SPENCER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1892. 26s.

"The book is well and carefully edited."—Law Journal.

"A complete modern compendium on agricultural matters."—Law Times.

FINANCE ACT.—Vide "Death Duties."

FIXTURES.—Amos and Ferard on the Law of Fixtures and other Property partaking both of a Real and Personal Nature. Third Edition. By C. A. FERARD and W. HOWLAND ROBERTS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1883. 18s.

FORMS.—Archibald.—Vide "Chamber Practice."

Bullen and Leake.—Vide "Pleading."

Chitty's Forms of Practical Proceedings in the Queen's Bench Division. Twelfth Edition. By T. W. CHITTY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1883. (Published at 1*l.* 18s.) Reduced to net 20s.

Daniell's Forms and Precedents of Proceedings in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice and on Appeal therefrom.—Fourth Edition. By CHARLES BURNET, B.A., a Chief Clerk of the Hon. Mr. Justice Chitty. Royal 8vo. 1886. 2*l.* 10s.

"The standard work on Chancery Procedure."—Law Quarterly Review.

FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.—Moncreiff's Treatise on the Law relating to Fraud and Misrepresentation.—By the Hon. F. MONCREIFF, Barrister-at-Law. 8vo. 1891. 21s.

FRENCH CIVIL CODE.—Cachard's French Civil Code, with the various Amendments thereto, as in force on March 15th, 1895.—By HENRY CACHARD, B.A., and Counsellor-at-Law of the New York Bar, Licencié en Droit de la Faculté de Paris. Demy 8vo. 1895. 20s.
Code of Commerce.—Vide "Commercial Law."

FRENCH LAW.—Sewell's Outline of French Law as affecting British Subjects. By J. T. B. SEWELL, M.A., LL.D., Solicitor. Demy 8vo. 1897. 10s. 6d.

GAME LAWS.—Warry's Game Laws of England. With an Appendix of the Statutes relating to Game. By G. TAYLOR WARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1896. 10s. 6d.

"The author has treated the subject in a clear and lucid style."—Law Times.

GOODWILL.—Allan's Law relating to Goodwill.—By CHARLES E. ALLAN, M.A., LL.B., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1889. 7s. 6d.

HACKNEY CARRIAGES.—Vide "Motor Cars."

HIGHWAYS.—Chambers' Law relating to Highways and Bridges. By GEORGE F. CHAMBERS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 1878. 7s. 6d.

HOUSE TAX.—Ellis's Guide to the House Tax Acts, for the use of the Payer of Inhabited House Duty in England.—By ARTHUR M. ELLIS, LL.B. (Lond.), Solicitor, Author of "A Guide to the Income Tax Acts." Royal 12mo. 1885. 6s.

"We have found the information accurate, complete and very clearly expressed."—Solicitors' Journal.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.—Lush's Law of Husband and Wife, within the jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench and Chancery Divisions. By C. MONTAGUE LUSH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. By the Author and W. H. GRIFFITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1896. 1*l.* 6s.

"To the practising lawyer the work will be of the utmost importance."—Law Times.

"This book will certainly be consulted when difficulties arise relative to the position of married women."—Law Journal.

* * * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

INCOME TAX.—Ellis' Guide to the Income Tax Acts.—For the use of the English Income Tax Payer. Third Edition. By ARTHUR M. ELLIS, LL.B. (Lond.), Solicitor. Royal 12mo. 1893. 7s. 6d.
 "Contains in a convenient form the law bearing upon the Income Tax."—Law Times.

Robinson's Law relating to Income Tax; with the Statutes, Forms, and Decided Cases in the Courts of England, Scotland, and Ireland.—By ARTHUR ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1896. 21s.

"The standard work on a complicated and difficult subject."—Law Journal.

"Mr. Robinson has exercised the greatest care in the work, which commends itself to our judgment in every respect."—Law Times.

INLAND REVENUE.—Highmore's Summary Proceedings in Inland Revenue Cases in England and Wales.—Second Edition. By N. J. HIGHMORE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and of the Solicitors' Department, Inland Revenue. Roy. 12mo. 1887. 7s. 6d.

Highmore's Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890, as amended by the Public Accounts and Charges Act, 1891, and the Finance Act, 1896, with other Acts, including the Superannuation Acts and the Public Officers Protection Act, 1893; with Notes, Table of Cases, &c. By NATHANIEL J. HIGHMORE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Assistant Solicitor of Inland Revenue. Demy 8vo. 1896. 7s. 6d.

INSURANCE.—Arnould on the Law of Marine Insurance.—Sixth Edition. By DAVID MACLACHLAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 1887. 3l.

"As a text book, 'Arnould' is now all the practitioner can want."—Law Times.

Lowndes' Practical Treatise on the Law of Marine Insurance.—By RICHARD LOWNDES. Author of "The Law of General Average," &c. Third Edition. By WALTER LOWNDES. (In preparation.)

McArthur on the Contract of Marine Insurance.—Second Edition. By CHARLES McARTHUR, Average Adjuster. Demy 8vo. 1890. 16s.

"The work is carefully executed and brought down to date."—Law Journal.

Tyser's Law relating to Losses under a Policy of Marine Insurance.—By CHARLES ROBERT TYSER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1894. 10s. 6d.

"A clear, correct, full, and yet concise statement of the law."—Law Times.

INTERNATIONAL LAW.—Dicey.—Vide "Conflict of Laws."

Hall's International Law.—Fourth Edit. Demy 8vo. 1896. 1l. 2s. 6d.

Hall's Treatise on the Foreign Powers and Jurisdiction of the British Crown. By W. E. HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1894. 10s. 6d.

Kent's Commentary on International Law.—Edited by J. T. ARDY, LL.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 1878. 10s. 6d.

Nelson's Private International Law.—By HORACE NELSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Roy. 8vo. 1889. 21s.

"The notes are full of matter, and avoid the vice of discursiveness, cases being cited for practically every proposition."—Law Times.

Rattigan's Private International Law.—By Sir WILLIAM HENRY RATTIGAN, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law, Vice-Chancellor of the University of the Punjab. Demy 8vo. 1895. 10s. 6d.

"Written with admirable clearness."—Law Journal.

Walker's Manual of Public International Law.—By T. A. WALKER, M.A., LL.D., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1896. 9s.

Walker's Science of International Law.—By T. A. WALKER, M.A., LL.D., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1893. 18s.

•• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

INTERNATIONAL LAW—continued.

Westlake's International Law.—Chapters on the Principles of International Law. By J. WESTLAKE, Q.C., LL.D. Demy 8vo. 1894. 10s.

Wheaton's Elements of International Law; Third English Edition. Edited with Notes and Appendix of Statutes and Treaties. By A. C. BOYD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1889. 17. 10s.

"Wheaton stands too high for criticism, whilst Mr. Boyd's merits as an editor are almost as well established."—Law Times.

JOINT STOCKS.—Palmer.—Vide "Company Law," "Conveyancing," and "Winding-up."

Thring's Law and Practice of Joint Stock and other Companies.—By LORD THRING, K.C.B. Fifth Edition. By J. M. REMDEL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1889. 17. 10s.

JURISPRUDENCE.—Holland's Elements of Jurisprudence.—Eighth Edition. By T. E. HOLLAND, D.C.L. 8vo. 1896. 10s. 6d.

Markby's Elements of Law, considered with reference to Principles of General Jurisprudence. By Sir WILLIAM MARKBY, D.C.L. Demy 8vo. 1896. 12s. 6d.

JURY LAWS.—Huband's Practical Treatise on the Law relating to the Grand Jury in Criminal Cases, the Coroner's Jury, and the Petty Jury in Ireland.—By WM. G. HUBAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1896. 36s.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.—Magistrate's Annual Practice for 1897.—Being a Compendium of the Law and Practice relating to matters occupying the attention of Courts of Summary Jurisdiction, with an Appendix of Statutes and Rules, List of Punishments, Calendar for Magistrates, &c. By CHARLES MILLNER ATKINSON, Esq., Stipendiary Magistrate for the City of Leeds. 8vo. 1897. 18s.

"An excellent magisterial guide."—Law Journal.

"Cannot fail to be of great service in any court of summary jurisdiction."—Solicitors' Journal.

"There is a useful table of penalties on summary conviction, and a good index."—Law Times.

"We can commend the use of the volume to all magisterial benches."—The Field.

Penalties on Summary Convictions.—Reprinted from "The Magistrates' Annual Practice." 1897. Sold separately. Net 1s.

Magistrates' Cases, 1893, 1894, 1895 & 1896.—Cases relating to the Poor Law, the Criminal Law, Licensing, and other subjects chiefly connected with the duties and office of Magistrates, decided in the House of Lords, the Court of Appeal, the Queen's Bench Division, and in the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, from Michaelmas, 1892, to Michaelmas, 1896. 1894-96. Each, net 1l.

* * These Reports, which have hitherto been published as part of the Law Journal Reports, are now issued Quarterly. In Parts. Each, net 6s.

Annual Subscription, payable in advance, 15s. post free.

Shirley's Magisterial Law.—An Elementary Treatise on Magisterial Law, and on the Practice of Magistrates' Courts. Second Edition. By LEONARD H. WEST, LL.D., Solicitor. Demy 8vo. 1896. 7s. 6d.

"It is written clearly and concisely, is well arranged, and admirably adapted to its object—namely, to give the student and also the young practitioner such a general view of the subject as will fit the one for his examination, the other to appreciate the standard books of references on magisterial law."—Solicitors' Journal.

* * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

LAGOS.—Ordinances, and Orders and Rules thereunder, in Force in the Colony of Lagos on December 31st, 1893.—By GEORGE STALLARD, Queen's Advocate, and E. H. RICHARDS, District Commissioner of Lagos. Royal 8vo. 1894. Half-calf, 42s.

LAND TAX.—Bourdin's Land Tax.—An Exposition of the Land Tax. Including the Latest Judicial Decisions, and the Changes in the Law effected by the Taxes Management Act, and by the Act Converting the Three per Cent. into Two and Three-quarter per Cent. Stock, with other Additional Matter. Fourth Edition. By the late FREDERICK HUMPHREYS, Deputy Registrar of Land Tax; and Digests of Cases decided in the Courts by CHARLES C. ATCHISON, Deputy Registrar of Land Tax. Royal 12mo. 1894. 7s. 6d.

"To anyone concerned in the redemption of land tax this Treatise is indispensable."—Solicitors' Journal.

Atchison's Land Tax.—Changes Effected in the Processes of Assessment and Redemption by Part VI. of the Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28). By CHARLES C. ATCHISON, Deputy Registrar of Land Tax. Royal 12mo. 1897. Net, 2s. 6d.

•• Forms a Supplement to above.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.—Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant.—With a full Collection of Precedents and Forms of Procedure; containing also a collection of Leading Propositions. Fifteenth Ed. By J. M. LEE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Roy. 8vo. 1893. 11. 18s.

"The editor has expended elaborate industry and systematic ability in making the work as perfect as possible."—Solicitors' Journal.

Lely and Peck.—Vide "Leases."

LANDS CLAUSES ACTS.—Jepson's Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts; with Decisions, Forms, and Table of Costs. By ARTHUR JEPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1880. 18s.

LAW JOURNAL REPORTS.—Edited by JOHN MEWS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Published monthly. Annual Subscription:— Reports and Public General Statutes Net, 31. 4s.
Reps. Stats. & Mews' Annual Digest (Issued Quarterly) Net, 31. 10s.
Or, with the Law Journal weekly, 11. extra.

Subscribers to the above will be entitled to a copy of—

An Analytical Digest of Cases in the Law Journal and Law Reports, 1890-95, published at 11. 10s. for 5s.

Synopsis of Contemporary Reports, 1832-95.—Printed on linen paper and bound in boards. Uniform in size with the Reports. Price, net, 5s. for 2s. 6d.

LAW LIST.—Law List (The).—Comprising the Judges and Officers of the Courts of Justice, Counsel, Special Pleaders, Conveyancers, Solicitors, Proctors, Notaries, &c., in England and Wales; the Circuits, Judges, Treasurers, Registrars, and High Bailiffs of the County Courts; Metropolitan and Stipendiary Magistrates, Official Receivers under the Bankruptcy Act, Law and Public Officers in England and the Colonies, Foreign Lawyers with their English Agents, Clerks of the Peace, Town Clerks, Coroners, &c., &c., and Commissioners for taking Oaths, Conveyancers Practising in England under Certificates obtained in Scotland. Compiled, so far as relates to Special Pleaders, Conveyancers, Solicitors, Proctors and Notaries, by JOHN SAMUEL PURCELL, C.B., Controller of Stamps, and Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and Published by the Authority of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and of the Incorporated Law Society. 1897. (Postage 6d. extra.) Net, 10s. 6d.

•• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW—Edited by Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., M.A., LL.D., Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford. Vols. I.—XIII. (with General Index to Vols. I. to X.) Royal 8vo. 1885-97. Each, 12s.

Subscription for 1898 post free 12s. 6d., net. Single numbers, each 6s.
 "The greatest of legal quarterly reviews . . . the series of 'Notes' always so entertaining and illustrative, not merely of the learning of the accomplished jurist (the Editor) but of the grace of language with which such learning can be unfolded."—Law Jour.

LAWYER'S ANNUAL LIBRARY—

- (1) The Annual Practice.—SNOW, BURNBY, and STRINGER.
- (2) The Annual Digest.—MEWS. (Issued Quarterly.)
- (3) The Annual Statutes.—LELY.
- (4) The Annual County Court Practice.—SMYLY.

Annual Subscriptions, payable on or before August 31st—

For the Complete Series, as above, delivered on the day of publication. Net, 2l. 5s., or carriage free, 2l. 7s.

No. 1, 2, and 3 only. Net, 1l. 15s., or carriage free, 1l. 17s.

No. 2, 3, and 4 only. Net, 1l. 15s., or carriage free, 1l. 17s.

LAWYER'S COMPANION.—Vide "Diary."

LEADING CASES.—Ball's Leading Cases. Vide "Torts."

Haynes' Student's Leading Cases.—With Notes. Second Edition.

By JOHN F. HAYNES, LL.D. Demy 8vo. 1884. 16s.

Shirley's Selection of Leading Cases in the Common Law. With Notes. By W. S. SHIRLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Fifth Edition.

By RICHARD WATSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1896. 16s.

"A sound knowledge of common law can be gleaned from Shirley."—Law Notes.

Warburton's Selection of Leading Cases in the Criminal Law. With Notes. By HENRY WARBURTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[Founded on "Shirley's Leading Cases."] Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 1897. 10s. 6d.

"The cases have been well selected, and arranged. . . . We consider that it will amply repay the student or the practitioner to read both the cases and the notes."—Justice of the Peace.

LEASES.—Lely and Peck's Precedents of Leases for Years, with a short Introduction and Notes. By J. M. LELY and W. A. PECK, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1889. 10s. 6d.

LEGAL INTERPRETATION.—Beal's Cardinal Rules of Legal Interpretation.—Collected and Arranged by EDWARD BEAL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1896. 12s. 6d.

"Invaluable to the student. To those with a limited library, or a busy practice, it will be indispensable."—Justice of Peace.

LEXICON.—Vide "Dictionary."

LIBEL AND SLANDER.—Odgers on Libel and Slander.—A Digest of the Law of Libel and Slander: with the Evidence, Procedure, Practice, and Precedents of Pleadings, both in Civil and Criminal Cases. Third Edition. By W. BLAKE ODGERS, LL.D., one of Her Majesty's Counsel. Royal 8vo. 1896. 32s.

"The best modern book on the law of libel."—Daily News.

"The most scientific of all our law books. . . . In its new dress this volume is secure of an appreciative professional welcome."—Law Times.

LIBRARIES AND MUSEUMS.—Chambers' Digest of the Law relating to Public Libraries and Museums, and Literary and Scientific Institutions: with much Practical Information. 3rd Edit. By GEO. F. CHAMBERS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Roy. 8vo. 1889. 8s. 6d.

LICENSING.—Lathom's Handy Guide to the Licensing Acts. By H. W. LATHOM, Solicitor. Royal 12mo. 1894. 5s.

"This book is arranged in dictionary form, with especial regard to ease of reference, and should prove an immense saving of time and labour to the large class to whom it is addressed. The mass of confusing statute and case law on this wide subject has been most ably codified."—Law Times.

•• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

LICENSING—continued.

Talbot's Law and Practice of Licensing.—Being a Digest of the Law regulating the Sale by Retail of Intoxicating Liquor. With a full Appendix of Statutes and Forms. By GEORGE JOHN TALBOT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. With Addendum containing the decision of the House of Lords in Boulter v. Justices of Kent. Royal 12mo. 7s. 6d.

"His method gives professional men a guide to the legislation afforded by no other book."—Law Journal.

LOCAL AND MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.—Bazalgette and Humphreys' Law relating to County Councils.—Third Edition. By GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Esq. Royal 8vo. 1889. 7s. 6d.

Bazalgette and Humphreys' Law relating to Local and Municipal Government. Comprising the Statutes relating to Public Health, Municipal Corporations, Highways, Burial, Gas and Water, Public Loans, Compulsory Taking of Lands, Tramways, Electric Lighting, &c. With Addenda. By C. NORMAN BAZALGETTE and G. HUMPHREYS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Sup. royal 8vo. 1888. 3l. 3s.

Chambers.—Vide "District Councils."

Humphreys.—Vide "Parish Law."

LONDON LOCAL GOVERNMENT.—Hunt's London Local Government. The Law relating to the London County Council, the Vestries and District Boards elected under the Metropolis Management Acts, and other Local Authorities. By JOHN HUNT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 1897. 3l. 3s.

"This very comprehensive and well-arranged code of London Local Government will be invaluable to local authorities, the legal profession and others directly interested in the subject."—London.

LUNACY.—Elmer's Practice in Lunacy.—Seventh Edition. By JOSEPH ELMER, Esq., late of the Office of the Masters in Lunacy. Demy 8vo. 1892. 21s.

MAGISTRATES' PRACTICE and MAGISTERIAL LAW.—Vide "Justice of the Peace."

MALICIOUS PROSECUTIONS.—Stephen's Law relating to Actions for Malicious Prosecutions.—By HERBERT STEPHEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1888. 6s.

MARINE INSURANCE.—Vide "Insurance."

MARITIME DECISIONS.—Douglas' Maritime Law Decisions.—Compiled by ROBT. R. DOUGLAS. Demy 8vo. 1888. 7s. 6d.

MARRIAGE.—Kelly's French Law of Marriage, Marriage Contracts, and Divorce, and the Conflict of Laws arising therefrom. Second Edition. By OLIVER E. BODINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Licencié en Droit de la Faculté de Paris. Roy. 8vo. 1895. 21s.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY.—Lush's Married Women's Rights and Liabilities in relation to Contracts, Torts, and Trusts. By MONTAGUE LUSH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The Law of Husband and Wife." Royal 12mo. 1887. 5s.

MASTER AND SERVANT.—Macdonell's Law of Master and Servant. Second Edition. By JOHN MACDONELL, LL.D., M.A., Esq., a Master of the Supreme Court. (In preparation.)

MEDICAL PARTNERSHIPS.—Barnard and Stocker's Medical Partnerships, Transfers, and Assistantships.—By WILLIAM BARNARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and G. BERTRAM STOCKER, Esq., Managing Director of the Scholastic, Clerical and Medical Association (Limited). Demy 8vo. 1895. 10s. 6d.

* * * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

MERCANTILE LAW.—Smith's Compendium of Mercantile Law. —Tenth Edition. By JOHN MACDONELL, Esq., a Master of the Supreme Court of Judicature, assisted by GEO. HUMPHREYS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 1890. 2l. 2s.

"Of the greatest value to the mercantile lawyer."—Law Times.

"We have no hesitation in recommending the work before us to the profession and the public as a reliable guide to the subjects included in it, and as constituting one of the most scientific treatises extant on mercantile law."—Sol. Jo.

Tudor's Selection of Leading Cases on Mercantile and Maritime Law.—With Notes. By O. D. TUDOR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition. Royal 8vo. 1884. 2l. 2s.

Wilson's Mercantile Handbook of the Liabilities of Merchant, Shipowner, and Underwriter on Shipments by General Vessels.—By A. WILSON, Solicitor and Notary. Royal 12mo. 1883. 6s.

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT.—Payn's Merchandise Marks Act, 1887.—By H. PAYN, Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1888. 3s. 6d.
"A safe guide to all who are interested in the Act."—Law Times.

METROPOLIS BUILDING ACTS.—Craies' London Building Act, 1894; with Introduction, Notes, and Index.—By W. F. CRAIES, Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1894. Net 3s.

Craies' London Building Act, 1894: with Introduction, Notes, and Index, and a Table showing how the Former Enactments relating to Buildings have been dealt with.—By W. F. CRAIES, Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1894. 6s.

MINES.—Rogers' Law relating to Mines, Minerals and Quarries in Great Britain and Ireland, with a Summary of the Laws of Foreign States, &c. Second Edition Enlarged. By His Honor Judge ROGERS. 8vo. 1876. 1l. 11s. 6d.

MORALS AND LEGISLATION.—Bentham's Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation.—By JEREMY BENTHAM, M.A., Benchor of Lincoln's Inn. Crown 8vo. 1879. 6s. 6d.

MORTGAGE.—Beddoes' Concise Treatise on the Law of Mortgage.—By W. F. BEDDOES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 8vo. 1893. 10s.
"Compiled carefully and with discretion."—Law Times.

Robbins' Treatise on the Law of Mortgages, Pledges and Hypothecations.—By L. G. GORDON ROBBINS, Assisted by F. T. MAW, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Founded on "Coote's Law of Mortgage." 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 1897. (Just ready.) 3l.

MOTOR CARS.—Bonner's Law of Motor Cars, Hackney and other Carriages.—An Epitome of the Law, Statutes, and Regulations. By G. A. BONNER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. 7s. 6d.
"The book is full of useful information, and will undoubtedly prove of service to those who require advice on this subject."—Law Times.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.—Bazalgette and Humphreys.—Vide "Local and Municipal Government."

Lely's Law of Municipal Corporations.—By J. M. LELY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1882. 15s.

NAVY.—Thring's Criminal Law of the Navy. 2nd Edit. By THEODORE THRING, Esq., and C. E. GIFFORD, Esq., Assistant-Paymaster, Royal Navy. 12mo. 1877. 12s. 6d.

NEGIGENCE.—Smith's Treatise on the Law of Negligence. Second Edition. By HORACE SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Editor of "Addison on Contracts, and Torts," &c. 8vo. 1884. 12s. 6d.

•• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

- NIGER COAST.—Hodges' Consular Jurisdiction in Her Majesty's Protectorate of the Niger Coast: with an Analytical Index to the Africa Orders in Council, 1889, 1892, and 1893. Compiled by FRANCIS E. HODGES, Solicitor of the Supreme Court, and Solicitor of the Supreme Court of the Gold Coast Colony. Royal 8vo. 1895. 15s.
- NISI PRIUS.—Roscoe's Digest of the Law of Evidence on the Trial of Actions at Nisi Prius.—Sixteenth Edition. By MAURICE POWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. 1891. 2l. 10s.
"Continues to be a vast and closely packed storehouse of information on practice at Nisi Prius."—Law Journal.
- NONCONFORMISTS.—Winslow's Law Relating to Protestant Nonconformists and their Places of Worship.—By REGINALD WINSLOW, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo. 1886. 6s.
- NOTARY.—Brooke's Treatise on the Office and Practice of a Notary of England.—With a full collection of Precedents. Fifth Ed. By G. F. CHAMBERS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1890. 1l. 1s.
- OATHS.—Stringer's Oaths and Affirmations in Great Britain and Ireland; being a Collection of Statutes, Cases, and Forms, with Notes and Practical Directions for the use of Commissioners for Oaths, and of all Courts of Civil Procedure and Offices attached thereto. By FRANCIS A. STRINGER, of the Central Office, Royal Courts of Justice, one of the Editors of the "Annual Practice." Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 1893. 4s.
"Indispensable to all commissioners."—Solicitors' Journal.
- OTTOMAN CIVIL LAW.—Grigsby's Medjellé, or Ottoman Civil Law.—Translated into English. By W. E. GRIGSBY, LL.D., Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1895. 21s.
- PARISH LAW.—Humphreys' Parish Councils.—The Law relating to Parish Councils, being the Local Government Act, 1894; with an Appendix of Statutes, together with an Introduction, Notes, and a Copious Index. Second Edition. By GEORGE HUMPHREYS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The Law relating to County Councils," &c. Royal 8vo. 1895. 10s.
- Steer's Parish Law. Sixth Edition. By W. H. MACNAMARA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. (In preparation.)
- PARTNERSHIP.—Pollock's Digest of the Law of Partnership; incorporating the Partnership Act, 1890. Sixth Edition. By SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., Barrister-at-Law. Author of "Principles of Contract," "The Law of Torts," &c. Demy 8vo. 1895. 8s. 6d.
"We are confident this book will be most popular as well as extremely useful."
 Turner.—Vide "Conveyancing."—Law Times.
- PATENTS.—Edmunds on Patents.—The Law and Practice of Letters Patent for Inventions. By LEWIS EDMUNDS, Q.C. Second Edition. By T. M. STEVENS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Roy. 8vo. 1897. 1l. 12s.
"We have nothing but commendation for the book."—Solicitors' Journal.
"It would be difficult to make it more complete."—Law Times.
- Edmunds' Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1888, Consolidated with an Index. Second Edition. By LEWIS EDMUNDS, Q.C., D.Sc., LL.B. Imp. 8vo. 1895. Net 2s. 6d.
- Gordon's Monopolies by Patents and the Statutable Remedies available to the Public. By J. W. GORDON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. 18s.
"A treatise which we think must take a unique place in our legal literature."
 —Law Times.
- Johnson's Patentees' Manual.—A Treatise on the Law and Practice of Patents for Inventions. Sixth Edition. By JAMES JOHNSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law; and J. HENRY JOHNSON, Solicitor and Patent Agent. Demy 8vo. 1890. 10s. 6d.

* * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

PATENTS—continued.

Morris.—Vide "Conveyancing."

Thompson's Handbook of Patent Law of all Countries.—By WM. P. THOMPSON. Tenth Edition. 12mo. 1896. Net, 2s. 6d.

PERPETUITIES.—Marsden's Rule against Perpetuities.—A Treatise on Remoteness in Limitation. By REGINALD G. MARSDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1883. 16s.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.—Smith.—Vide "Real Property."

PLEADING.—Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleadings, with Notes and Rules relating to Pleading. Fifth Edition. Revised and Adapted to the Present Practice in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. By THOMAS J. BULLEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, CYRIL DODD, Esq., Q.C., and C. W. CLIFFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1897. 38s.

"The standard work on modern pleading."—Law Journal, April 10, 1897.

Odgers' Principles of Pleading, Practice and Procedure in Civil Actions in the High Court of Justice.—Third Edition. By W. BLAKE ODGERS, LL.D., Q.C., Recorder of Winchester, Author of "A Digest of the Law of Libel and Slander." Demy 8vo. 1897. 12s. 6d.

"The student or practitioner who desires instruction and practical guidance in our modern system of pleading cannot do better than possess himself of Mr. Odgers' book."—Law Journal.

POISONS.—Reports of Trials for Murder by Poisoning.—With Chemical Introductions and Notes. By G. LATHAM BROWNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and C. G. STEWART, Senior Assistant in the Laboratory of St. Thomas's Hospital, &c. Demy 8vo. 1883. 12s. 6d.

POWERS.—Farwell on Powers.—A Concise Treatise on Powers. Second Edition. By GEORGE FARWELL, Esq., Q.C., assisted by W. R. SHELTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1893. 1l. 5s.

"The practitioner and the judge will find it comprehensive and complete."—Law Times.

PRESCRIPTION.—Herbert's History of the Law of Prescription in England.—By T. A. HERBERT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1891. 10s.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.—Wright's Law of Principal and Agent. By E. B. WRIGHT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1894. 18s.

"Clearly arranged and clearly written. Completely up to date."—Law Times.

"The work is remarkably complete."—Law Journal.

"May with confidence be recommended to all legal practitioners as an accurate and handy text book on the subjects comprised in it."—Solicitors' Journal.

PRINTERS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Powell's Laws specially affecting Printing, Publishers and Newspaper Proprietors. By ARTHUR POWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1889. 4s.

PRIVY COUNCIL LAW.—Wheeler's Privy Council Law: A Synopsis of all the Appeals decided by the Judicial Committee (including Indian Appeals) from 1876 to 1891. Together with a précis of the Cases from the Supreme Court of Canada. By GEORGE WHEELER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and of the Judicial Department of the Privy Council. Royal 8vo. 1893. 31s. 6d.

"The cases are summarised with brevity and with the skill of a practised lawyer in seizing upon essential facts and legal points embodied in each case, and in distinguishing law and practice."

PROBATE.—Powles and Oakley's Law and Practice relating to Probate and Administration. By L. D. FOWLES, Barrister-at-Law, and T. W. H. OAKLEY, of the Probate Registry, (Being a Third Edition of "Browne on Probate.") Demy 8vo. 1892. 1l. 10s.

* * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

PROPERTY.—See also "Real Property."

Raleigh's Outline of the Law of Property.—Demy 8vo. 1890. 7s. 6d.
 Strahan's General View of the Law of Property.—Intended as a first book for Students. By J. A. STRAHAN, assisted by J. SINGCLAIR BAXTER, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1895. 12s. 6d.

"A well written and useful work."—Law Notes.

"There is no work that we know which we should more confidently place in the hands of one beginning the study of the law."—Law Times.

PUBLIC HEALTH.—Bazalgette and Humphreys.—Vide "Local and Municipal Government."

Hunt.—Vide "London Local Government."

PUBLIC MEETINGS.—Chambers' Handbook for Public Meetings, including Hints as to the Summoning and Management of them. Second Edition. By GEORGE F. CHAMBERS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1886. Net, 2s. 6d.

QUARTER SESSIONS.—Archbold.—Vide "Criminal Law."

RAILWAY RATES.—Darlington's Railway Rates and the Carriage of Merchandise by Railway; including the Provisional Orders of the Board of Trade as sanctioned by Parliament, containing the Classification of Traffic and Schedule of Maximum Rates and Charges applicable to the Railways of Great Britain and Ireland. By H. R. DARLINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1893. 11s. 5s.

RAILWAYS.—Browne and Theobald's Law of Railway Companies.—Being a Collection of the Acts and Orders relating to Railway Companies in England and Ireland, with Notes of all the Cases decided thereon, and Appendix of Bye-Laws and Standing Orders of the House of Commons. Second Edition. By J. H. BALFOUR BROWNE, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Counsel, and H. S. THEOBALD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1888. 11s. 15s.

"Contains in a very concise form the whole law of railways."—The Times.

RATES AND RATING.—Castle's Law and Practice of Rating.—Third Edition. By EDWARD JAMES CASTLE, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Counsel. Demy 8vo. 1895. 25s.

"A sure and safe guide, avoiding all speculation as to what the law might be."—Law Magazine.

"Mr. Castle's book has hitherto held a very high place, and the success that has attended it seems assured to the new edition."—Law Journal.

"A compendious treatise, which has earned the goodwill of the Profession on account of its conciseness, its lucidity, and its accuracy."—Law Times.

Chambers' Law relating to Local Rates; with especial reference to the Powers and Duties of Rate-levying Local Authorities, and their Officers; comprising the Statutes in full and a Digest of 718 Cases. Second Edition. By G. F. CHAMBERS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1889. 10s. 6d.

REAL PROPERTY.—Digby's History of the Law of Real Property.—Fourth Edition. Demy 8vo. 1892. 12s. 6d.

Leake's Elementary Digest of the Law of Property in Land.—Containing: Introduction. Part I. The Sources of the Law.—Part II. Estates in Land. By STEPHEN MARTIN LEAKE, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1874. Net, 15s.

Leake's Digest of the Law of Property in Land.—Part III. The Law of Uses and Profits of Land. By STEPHEN MARTIN LEAKE, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1888. Net, 15s.

Lightwood's Treatise on Possession of Land: with a chapter on the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 and 1874.—By JOHN M. LIGHTWOOD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1894. 15s.

•• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

REAL PROPERTY—continued.

Shearwood's Real Property.—A Concise Abridgment of the Law of Real Property and an Introduction to Conveyancing. Designed to facilitate the subject for Students preparing for examination. By JOSEPH A. SHEARWOOD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition. Demy 8vo. 1885. 8s. 6d.

Shelford's Real Property Statutes.—Comprising the principal Statutes relating to Real Property passed in the reigns of King William IV. and Queen Victoria, with Notes of Decided Cases. Ninth Edition. By THOMAS H. CARSON, assisted by HAROLD B. BOMPAS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1893. 30s.
"Absolutely indispensable to conveyancing and equity lawyers."

Smith's Real and Personal Property.—A Compendium of the Law of Real and Personal Property, primarily connected with Conveyancing. Designed as a Second Book for Students, and as a Digest of the most useful learning for Practitioners. By JOSEPH W. SMITH, B.C.L., Q.C. Sixth Edition. By the AUTHOR and J. TRUSTEAM, LL.M., Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. 1884. 2l. 2s.

"A book which he (the student) may read over and over again with profit and pleasure."—Law Times.

"Will be found of very great service to the practitioner."—Solicitors' Journal.

"A really useful and valuable work on our system of Conveyancing."—Law Students' Journal.

Strahan.—Vide "Property."

REGISTRATION.—Rogers.—Vide "Elections."

Coltman's Registration Cases.—Vol. I. (1879—1885). Royal 8vo. Calf. 2l. 8s.

Fox and Smith's Registration Cases.—Vol. I. (1886—1895). Royal 8vo. Calf. net, 2l. 10s.

Smith's (C. Lacey) Registration Cases. Vol. I., Part I. (1895—96). Net, 6s. 6d. Part II., 1896, 5s.

Lawson's Notes of Decisions under the Representation of the People Acts and the Registration Acts, 1885—1893, inclusive.—By WM. LAWSON, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1894. 24s.
Ditto, ditto, for 1894, 4s. 6d.; for 1895 4s. 6d.

REQUISITIONS ON TITLE.—Dickins.—Vide "Conveyancing."

RIVERS POLLUTION.—Haworth's Rivers Pollution.—The Statute Law relating to Rivers Pollution, containing the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 and 1893, together with the Special Acts in force in the West Riding of Yorkshire and the County of Lancaster. By CHARLES JOSEPH HAWORTH, Solicitor, B.A. (Cantab.), LL.B. (London). Royal 12mo. 1897. 6s.

ROMAN LAW.—Abdy and Walker's Institutes of Justinian, Translated, with Notes, by J. T. ABDY, LL.D., and the late BRYAN WALKER, M.A., LL.D. Crown 8vo. 1876. 16s.

Abdy and Walker's Commentaries of Gaius and Rules of Ulpian. With a Translation and Notes, by J. T. ABDY, LL.D., late Regius Professor of Laws in the University of Cambridge, and the late BRYAN WALKER, M.A., LL.D. New Edition by BRYAN WALKER. Crown 8vo. 1885. 16s.

Buckler's Origin and History of Contract in Roman Law down to the end of the Republican Period. By W. H. BUCKLER, B.A., LL.B. Post 8vo. Second Edition. (In the press.)

Goodwin's XII. Tables.—By FREDERICK GOODWIN, LL.D. London. Royal 12mo. 1886. 3s. 6d.

* * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

ROMAN LAW—continued.

- Greene's Outlines of Roman Law.—Consisting chiefly of an Analysis and Summary of the Institutes. For the use of Students. By T. WHITCOMBE GREENE, Barrister-at-law. Fourth Edition. Foolscap 8vo. 1884. 7s. 6d.
- Grueber's Lex Aquilia.—The Roman Law of Damage to Property: being a Commentary on the Title of the Digest "Ad Legem Aquilianam" (ix. 2). With an Introduction to the Study of the Corpus Iuris Civilis. By ERWIN GRUEBER, Dr. Jur., M.A. 8vo. 1886. 10s. 6d.
- Holland's Institutes of Justinian.—Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo. 1881. 6s.
- Holland and Shadwell's Select Titles from the Digest of Justinian.—Demy 8vo. 1881. 14s.
- Holland's Gentilis, Alberici, I.C.D., I.C.P.R., de Iure Belli Libri Tres.—Editio T. E. HOLLAND, I.C.D. Small 4to., half-morocco. 21s.
- Monro's Digest XIX. 2, Locati Conducti. Translated, with Notes, by C. H. MONRO, M.A. Crown 8vo. 1891. 5s.
- Monro's Digest XLVII. 2, De Furtis. Translated, with Notes, by C. H. MONRO, M.A. Crown 8vo. 1893. 6s.
- Moyle's Imperatoris Justiniani Institutiones.—Third Edition. 2 vols. Demy 8vo. 1896. 1l. 2s.
- Poste's Elements of Roman Law.—By Gaius. With a Translation and Commentary. Third Edition. By EDWARD POSTE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1890. 18s.
- Roby's Introduction to the Study of Justinian's Digest, containing an account of its composition and of the Jurists used or referred to therein. By H. J. ROBY, M.A. Demy 8vo. 1886. 9s.
- Roby's Justinian's Digest.—Lib. VII., Tit. I. De Usufructu, with a Legal and Philological Commentary. By H. J. ROBY, M.A. Demy 8vo. 1884. 9s.
- Or the Two Parts complete in One Volume. Demy 8vo. 18s.
- Sohm's Institutes of Roman Law.—By RUDOLPH SOHM, Professor in the University of Leipzig. Translated (from the Fourth Edition of the German) by J. C. LEDLIE, B.C.L., M.A. With an Introductory Essay by ERWIN GRUEBER, Dr. Jur., M.A. 8vo. 1892. 18s.
- Walker's Selected Titles from Justinian's Digest.—Annotated by the late BRYAN WALKER, M.A., LL.D.
- Part I. Mandati vel Contra. Digest xvii. 1. Crown 8vo. 1879. 5s.
- Part II. De Adquirendo rerum dominio, and De Adquirenda vel amittenda possessione. Digest xli. 1, 2. Crown 8vo. 1880. 6s.
- Part III. De Conditionibus. Digest xli. 1 and 4—7, and Digest xlii. 1—3. Crown 8vo. 1881. 6s.
- Walker's Fragments of the Perpetual Edict of Salvius Julianus. Collected and annotated by BRYAN WALKER, M.A., LL.D. Crown 8vo. 1877. 6s.
- Whewell's Grotius de Jure Belli et Pacis, with the Notes of Barbeyrac and others; accompanied by an abridged Translation of the Text, by W. WHEWELL, D.D. 3 vols. Demy 8vo. 1853. 12s.
- The Translation separate. 6s.

RULING CASES.—Campbell.—Vide "Digests."

- SALE OF GOODS.—Lely and Craies' Sale of Goods Act, 1893. —With Introduction, Notes, and Index. By J. M. LELY and W. F. CRAIES, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1894. Net 1s.

. All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

SALES.—Blackburn on Sales. A Treatise on the Effect of the Contract of Sale on the Legal Rights of Property and Possession in Goods, Wares, and Merchandise. By Lord BLACKBURN. 2nd Edit. By J. C. GRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1885. 1*l.* 1*s.*

"We have no hesitation in saying that the work has been edited with remarkable ability and success."—Law Quarterly Review.

SALES OF LAND.—Clerke and Humphry's Concise Treatise on the Law relating to Sales of Land. By AUBREY ST. JOHN CLERKE, and HUGH M. HUMPHRY, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1885. 1*l.* 6*s.*

SALVAGE.—Kennedy's Treatise on the Law of Civil Salvage.—By the Hon. Sir WILLIAM R. KENNEDY, a Justice of the High Court. Royal 8vo. 1891. 12*s.*

"The best work on the law of salvage. It is a complete exposition of the subject, and as such is accurate and exhaustive."—Law Times.

SHERIFF LAW.—Mather's Compendium of Sheriff Law, especially in relation to Writs of Execution.—By PHILIP E. MATHER, Solicitor and Notary, formerly Under Sheriff of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Royal 8vo. 1894. 25*s.*

"We think that this book will be of very great assistance to any persons who may fill the positions of high sheriff and under-sheriff from this time forth. The whole of the legal profession will derive great advantage from having this volume to consult."—Law Times.

SHIPOWNERS.—Holman's Handybook for Shipowners and Masters. Fourth Edition. By H. HOLMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1896. 6*s.*

SHIPPING.—Pulling's Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.—With Introduction, Notes, and Index. By ALEXANDER PULLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1894. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Pulling's Shipping Code; being the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60); With Introduction, Notes, Tables, Rules, Orders, Forms, and a Full Index.—By ALEXANDER PULLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1894. 7*s.* 6*d.*

*Interleaved and bound in blue leather, net 1*l.s.

Temperley's Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60). With an Introduction; Notes, including all Cases decided under the former enactments consolidated in this Act; a Comparative Table of Sections of the Former and Present Acts; an Appendix of Rules, Regulations, Forms, etc., and a Copious Index.—By ROBERT TEMPERLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1895. 25*s.*

"There is evidence of unusual care and industry in Mr. Temperley's elaborate work, by far the most comprehensive which has yet appeared on this lengthy and important consolidating measure."—Law Times.

"A full, complete, and most satisfactory work."—Law Quarterly Review.

"A monument of well-directed industry and knowledge directed to the elucidation of the most comprehensive and complicated Act."—Law Journal.

SLANDER.—Odgers.—Vide "Libel and Slander."

SOLICITORS.—Cordery's Law relating to Solicitors of the Supreme Court of Judicature. With an Appendix of Statutes and Rules, and Notes on Appointments open to Solicitors, and the Right to Admission to the Colonies. Second Edition. By A. CORDERY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1888. 16*s.*

Turner.—Vide "Conveyancing" and "Vendors and Purchasers."

. All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.—Fry's Treatise on the Specific Performance of Contracts. By the Right Hon. Sir EDWARD FRY. Third Edition. By the Author and E. PORTSMOUTH FRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1892. 17. 16s.

"The standard work on Specific Performance."—Law Gazette.

STAMP ACTS.—Highmore's Stamp Act, 1891, and the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891. With an Introduction and Notes, and a copious Index. By NATHANIEL JOSEPH HIGHMORE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Assistant-Solicitor of the Inland Revenue. Demy 8vo. 1891. 5s.

"A useful guide to those who desire to understand the present state of the stamp laws."—Law Journal.

STATUTE LAW.—Wilberforce on Statute Law. The Principles which govern the Construction and Operation of Statutes. By E. WILBERFORCE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 1881. 18s.

STATUTES, and vide "Acts of Parliament."

Chitty's Statutes.—New Edition.—The Statutes of Practical Utility, from the earliest times to 1894 inclusive. Arranged in Alphabetical and Chronological Order; with Notes and Indexes. Fifth Edition. By J. M. LEXY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. Complete with Index. In 13 Volumes. 1894–1895. 137. 13s.

Annual Supplement for 1895. By J. M. LEXY, Esq. 5s.
For 1896. 10s.

"It is a book which no public library should be without."—Spectator.

"We think that the present edition will not only keep up, but add to the reputation of the work, and render it a work of permanent value to the practising lawyer."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The profession will feel grateful both to the editor and the publishers of a work which will be found of the highest value."—Law Journal.

"A legal work of the very highest importance. . . . Few besides lawyers will, we suspect, realise the amount of work which such an undertaking involves to the editor, who appears to have spared no pains to give a clear, orderly, and methodical character to the compilation."—Daily News.

"This collection has fulfilled a purpose of usefulness only to be understood by those who are acquainted with the amazing complexity of English statute law, with its bewildering incoherence and painful heterogeneity."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The efforts of the editor of Chitty's Statutes are directed to the collection and arrangement, under convenient heads, of all the body of practical legislation under which we live."—Daily Chronicle.

"Indispensable in the library of every lawyer."—Saturday Review.

"It is needless to enlarge on the value of 'Chitty's Statutes' to both the Bar and to Solicitors, for it is attested by the experience of many years."—The Times.

"We have examined, with some care and much interest, each volume as it has come with rapidity and accuracy from the press, and we must confess to some amazement at the remarkable skill and expedition with which the compilation has progressed. Not only to lawyers, but to all concerned with the laws of England. Chitty's Statutes of Practical Utility are of essential importance, whilst to the practising lawyer they are an absolute necessity."—Law Times.

••• All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

SUMMARY CONVICTIONS.—Paley's Law and Practice of Summary Convictions under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848—1884; including Proceedings Preliminary and Subsequent to Convictions, and the Responsibility of Convicting Magistrates and their Officers, with the Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1886, and Forms.—Seventh Edition. By W. H. MACNAMARA, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1892. 24s.

TAXPAYERS' GUIDES.—Vide "House," "Income," & "Land Tax."

THEATRES AND MUSIC HALLS.—Geary's Law of Theatres and Music Halls, including Contracts and Precedents of Contracts.—By W. N. M. GEARY, J.P. With Historical Introduction. By JAMES WILLIAMS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. 8vo. 1885. 6s.

TITHES.—Studd's Law of Tithes and Tithe Rent-Charge.—Being a Treatise on the Law of Tithe Rent-Charge, with a sketch of the History and Law of Tithes prior to the Commutation Acts, and including the Tithe Act of 1891, with the Rules thereunder. Second Edition. By EDWARD FAIRFAX STUDD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1891. 6s.

"This work is thoroughly reliable."—Solicitors' Journal.

TORTS.—Addison on Torts.—A Treatise on the Law of Torts; or Wrongs and their Remedies. Seventh Edition. By HORACE SMITH, Esq., Benchet of the Inner Temple, Metropolitan Magistrate, Editor of "Addison on Contracts," &c., and A. P. PERCEVAL KEEPE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1893. 12. 18s.

"As an exhaustive digest of all the cases which are likely to be cited in practice it stands without a rival."—Law Journal.

"As now presented, this valuable treatise must prove highly acceptable to judges and the profession."—Law Times.

"An indispensable addition to every lawyer's library."—Law Magazine.

Ball's Leading Cases on the Law of Torts, with Notes. Edited by W. E. BALL, LL.D., Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "Principles of Torts and Contracts." Royal 8vo. 1884. 12. 1s.

Bigelow's Elements of the Law of Torts.—A Text-Book for Students. By MELVILLE M. BIGELOW, Ph.D., Lecturer in the Law School of the University of Boston, U.S.A. Crown 8vo. 1889. 10s. 6d.

Innes' Principles of the Law of Torts.—By L. C. INNES, lately one of the Judges of the High Court, Madras, Author of "A Digest of the Law of Easements." Demy 8vo. 1891. 10s. 6d.

"A useful addition to any law library."—Law Quarterly Review.

Pollock's Law of Torts: a Treatise on the Principles of Obligations arising from Civil Wrongs in the Common Law, to which is added the draft of a code of Civil Wrongs prepared for the Government of India. Fifth Edition. By SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., Barrister-at-Law. Author of "Principles of Contract," "A Digest of the Law of Partnership," &c. Demy 8vo. 1897. 25s.

"Concise, logically arranged, and accurate."—Law Times.

"A book which is well worthy to stand beside the companion volume on 'Contracts.' Unlike so many law-books, especially on this subject, it is no mere digest of cases, but bears the impress of the mind of the writer from beginning to end."—Law Journal.

Shearwood's Sketch of the Law of Tort for the Bar and Solicitors' Final Examinations. By JOSEPH A. SHEARWOOD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1886. 3s.

* * * All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

TRADE MARKS.—Aston.—Vide "Patents."

Sebastian on the Law of Trade Marks and their Registration, and matters connected therewith, including a chapter on Goodwill; together with the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Acts, 1883-8, and the Trade Marks Rules and Instructions thereunder; Forms and Precedents; the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, and other Statutory Enactments; the United States Statutes, 1870-81, and the Rules and Forms thereunder; and the Treaty with the United States, 1877. Third Edition. By LEWIS BOYD SEBASTIAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1890. 11. 6s.

"Stands alone as an authority upon the law of trade-marks and their registration."—Law Journal.

"It is rarely we come across a law book which embodies the results of years of careful investigation and practical experience in a branch of law, or that can be unhesitatingly appealed to as a standard authority. This is what can be said of Mr. Sebastian's book."—Solicitors' Journal.

Sebastian's Digest of Cases of Trade Mark, Trade Name, Trade Secret, Goodwill, &c., decided in the Courts of the United Kingdom, India, the Colonies, and the United States of America. By LEWIS BOYD SEBASTIAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 8vo. 1879. 11. 1s.

"Will be of very great value to all practitioners who have to advise on matters connected with trade marks."—Solicitors' Journal.

TRAMWAYS.—Sutton's Tramway Acts of the United Kingdom; with Notes on the Law and Practice, an Introduction, including the Proceedings before the Committees, Decisions of the Referees with respect to Locus Standi, and a Summary of the Principles of Tramway Rating, and an Appendix containing the Standing Orders of Parliament. Rules of the Board of Trade relating to Tramways, &c. Second Edition. By HENRY SUTTON, assisted by ROBERT A. BENNETT, Barristers-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1883. 15s.

TRUST FUNDS.—Geare's Investment of Trust Funds.—Incorporating the Trustee Act, 1888. Second Edition. Including the Trusts Investment Act, 1889. By EDWARD ARUNDEL GEARE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 12mo. 1889. 7s. 6d.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.—Ellis' Trustee Act, 1893, including a Guide for Trustees to Investments. By ARTHUR LEE ELLIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Fifth Edit. Roy. 12mo. 1894. 6s.

"The entire Act is annotated, and the way in which this is done is satisfactory."—Law Journal.

"Mr. Arthur Lee Ellis gives many valuable hints to trustees, not only with regard to the interpretation of the measure, but also with regard to investments."

Godefroi's Law Relating to Trusts and Trustees.—Second Edit. By HENRY GODEFROI, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1891. 11. 12s.

"The second edition of this work which lies before us is a model of what a legal text-book ought to be. It is clear in style and clear in arrangement."—Law Times.

VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.—Dart's Vendors and Purchasers.—A Treatise on the Law and Practice relating to Vendors and Purchasers of Real Estate. By the late J. HENRY DART, Esq., one of the Six Conveyancing Counsel of the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division. Sixth Edition. By WILLIAM BARBER, Esq., Q.C., RICHARD BURDON HALDANE, and WILLIAM ROBERT SHELTON, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 1888. 31. 16s.

. All standard Law Works are kept in Stock, in law calf and other bindings.

VENDORS AND PURCHASERS.—continued.

Turner's Duties of Solicitor to Client as to Sales, Purchases, and Mortgages of Land.—Second Edition. By W. L. HACOX, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1893. 10s. 6d.

"The most skilled in practical conveyancing would gain many useful hints from a perusal of the book, and we recommend it in all confidence."—Law Notes.

See also Conveyancing.—"Turner."

Webster's Law Relating to Particulars and Conditions of Sale on a Sale of Land.—With Appendix of Forms. Second Edition. By WILLIAM FREDERICK WEBSTER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1896. 25s.

"This is the Second Edition of a well arranged and useful book, and the usefulness will not be impaired by the fact that the authority for each proposition and the reference to such authority are cited in the text itself instead of being relegated to a footnote."—Law Journal.

WAR, DECLARATION OF.—Owen's Declaration of War.—A Survey of the Position of Belligerents and Neutrals, with relative considerations of Shipping and Marine Insurance during War. By DOUGLAS OWEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo. 1889. 21s.

WILLS.—Theobald's Concise Treatise on the Law of Wills.—Fourth Edition. By H. S. THEOBALD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1895. 30s.

"A concise and convenient work of reference. . . . A condensed and trustworthy digest."—Law Quarterly Review.

"Comprehensive though easy to use, and we advise all conveyancers to get a copy of it without loss of time."—Law Journal.

"Of great ability and value. It bears on every page traces of care and sound judgment."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The work is, in our opinion, an excellent one, and of very great value, not only as a work of reference, but also for those who can afford to give special time to the study of the subject with which it deals."—Law Student's Journal.

Weaver's Precedents of Wills.—A Collection of Concise Precedents of Wills, with Introduction, Notes, and an Appendix of Statutes. By CHARLES WEAVER, B.A. Post 8vo. 1882. 5s.

WINDING UP.—Palmer's Company Precedents.—For use in relation to Companies, subject to the Companies Acts, 1862—1890. Part II. WINDING-UP FORMS AND PRACTICE. Arranged as follows:—Compulsory Winding-Up, Voluntary Winding-Up, Winding-Up under Supervision, Arrangements and Compromises, with a Chapter on Debentures, and copious Notes, and an Appendix of Acts and Rules. Seventh Edition. By FRANCIS BEAUFORT PALMER, assisted by FRANK EVANS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo. 1897. 32s.

"Palmer's 'Company Precedents' is the book par excellence for practitioners. . . . It is needless to recommend Mr. Palmer's book to the profession, for it is already known and appreciated. We advise those who have any doubts to consult it, and they will be in agreement with us."—Law Journal.

"Simply invaluable, not only to company lawyers, but to everybody connected with companies."—Financial News.

WRECK INQUIRIES.—Murton's Law and Practice relating to Formal Investigations in the United Kingdom, British Possessions and before Naval Courts into Shipping Casualties and the Incompetency and Misconduct of Ships' Officers. With an Introduction. By WALTER MURTON, Solicitor to the Board of Trade. Demy 8vo. 1884. 11. 4s.

WRONGS.—Addison, Ball, Pollock, Shearwood.—Vide "Torts."

STEVENS AND SONS, Ld., 119 & 120, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

NEW WORKS AND NEW EDITIONS

PREPARING FOR PUBLICATION.

- Annual Practice (The), 1898.—Edited by THOMAS SNOW, Barrister-at-Law; CHARLES BURNBY, a Master of the Supreme Court; and F. A. STRINGER, of the Central Office. 2 vols. (Nearly ready.)
- Annual County Court Practice (The), 1898.—By His Honour Judge SMYLY, Q.C. 2 vols. (In the press.)
- Brickdale's Land Transfer Acts, 1875 and 1897.—With a General Introduction to Conveyancing thereunder, a Commentary on the Acts, an Exposition of the Official Practice and of the Duties of the Real Representative; the Land Registry Rules, Fee Schedules, Solicitors' Costs, Model Registers, Forms, and Precedents. By C. FORTESCUE BRICKDALE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Assistant Registrar at the Land Registry, and W. R. SHELDON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. (In preparation.)
- Browne and Powles' Law and Practice in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.—Sixth Edition. By L. D. POWLES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. (Just ready.)
- Campbell's Ruling Cases.—Arranged, Annotated and Edited by R. CAMPBELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law; with American Notes by IRVING BROWNE, Esq. Vol. XIII.: Infant to Insurance. (Nearly ready.)
Vol. XIV.: Insurance to Judge. (In the press.)
To be completed in about 25 Volumes. Prospectus on application.
- Chitty's Forms of Practical Proceedings in the Queen's Bench Division. Thirteenth Edition. By T. W. CHITTY and HERBERT CHITTY, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. (In preparation.)
- Lowndes' Practical Treatise on the Law of Marine Insurance.—Third Edition. By WALTER LOWNDES, Esq. (In preparation.)
- Macdonell's Law of Master and Servant.—Second Ed. By JOHN MACDONELL, LL.D., Esq., a Master of the Supreme Court. (In preparation.)
- Mews' Complete Common Law and Equity Digest of all the Reported Decisions in the English Courts from 1756 to the Date of Publication.—Consolidating FISHER'S COMMON LAW DIGEST and CHITTY'S EQUITY INDEX. By JOHN MEWS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Editor of "The Law Journal Reports," assisted by other members of the Bar. (In preparation.)
- Odgers' Principles of Pleading, Practice, and Procedure in Civil Actions in the High Court of Justice.—Third Edition. By W. BLAKE ODGERS, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., Recorder of Winchester. (Just ready.)
- Robinson's Employers' Liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. By ARTHUR ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The Law Relating to Income Tax." (In preparation.)
- Roscoe's Admiralty Practice.—Third Edition. By E. S. ROSCOE, Assistant Registrar, Admiralty Court, and T. LAMBERT MEARS, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law. (In preparation.)
- Sebastian on the Law of Trade Marks and their Registration.—Fourth Edition. By LEWIS BOYD SEBASTIAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. (In preparation.)
- Smith's Manual of Common Law.—For Practitioners and Students. Comprising the Fundamental Principles, with useful Practical Rules and Decisions. By JOSIAH W. SMITH, B.C.L., Q.C. Eleventh Edition. By C. SPURLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. (In preparation.)
- Williams' Law and Practice in Bankruptcy.—By the Hon. Sir ROLAND L. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, a Justice of the High Court. Seventh Edit. By EDWARD WM. HANSELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Roy. 8vo. (In the press.)

ESTABLISHED IN 1822.

[75th YEAR OF ISSUE.]

THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS.

THE CHEAPEST, BEST, MOST ACCURATE, AND OLDEST-ESTABLISHED REPORTS.

EDITED BY JOHN MEWS, Barrister-at-Law.

SUB-EDITORS: W. E. GORDON AND A. J. SPENCER, Barristers-at-Law.

The following are a few of the advantages of these Reports:—

1. Conciseness and Accuracy.

On the question of accuracy the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS have never been impeached.

2. Speedy Publication of the Cases.

This is now a leading feature, the Reports being published as speedily as possible, consistent with good reporting and editing; and the Weekly Edition includes Notes of all Cases up to date.

3. Simplicity of Arrangement and Facility of Reference.

There is only One Volume in each year for each Division of the Courts,

4. Digests.

Mews' DIGEST of all the Reported Decisions of all the Superior Courts, including a Selection from the Irish, with a Collection of Cases followed, distinguished, explained, commented on, overruled or questioned, and References to the Statutes, Orders and Rules of Court during the year (issued Quarterly, commencing in 1897), will be supplied to Subscribers at the reduced rate of 6s.

5. Economy.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION.

The Law Journal Reports and Statutes - - - - £3: 4: 0

The Law Journal Reports, Statutes, and Mews' Annual } 3: 10: 0
Digest (issued Quarterly) - - - - }

LAW JOURNAL ANALYTICAL DIGEST of Cases in LAW JOURNAL and LAW REPORTS from Michaelmas, 1890, to Trinity, 1895. Uniform in size with the Reports. NOW READY. Price 30s. To Subscribers to LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, net, 6s. ; per post, 6d. extra.

SYNOPSIS of CONTEMPORARY REPORTS, 1832—1895.—Printed on linen paper and bound in boards. Uniform in size with the Reports. NOW READY. Price, net, 6s. To Subscribers to LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, post free for cash, net, 2s. 6d.

Subscribers to the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS have the additional advantage of obtaining, for a further Subscription of £1 per annum,

THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER,

Published Weekly (price 6d.), containing the best weekly Notes of all decided Cases of the week, New Orders and Rules of Court, Cause Lists, Articles by Eminent Specialists, Personal Information, Notices of all new Law Books, &c.

RULING CASES:

DL ASW YYG2
A general view of the law of p
Stanford Law Library

ROBI
Of Lincoln's 1

ASS

3 6105 044 312 234

BY M.A.,
e Scotch Bur.
R.

WITH AMERICAN NOTES

By IRVING BROWNE,

Formerly Editor of the "American Reports," &c.

TO BE COMPLETED IN ABOUT TWENTY-FIVE VOLUMES.

The following Volumes have been published:—

VOL. I.—Abandonment—Action.

II.—Action—Amendment.

III.—Ancient Light—Banker.

IV.—Bankruptcy—Bill of Lading.

V.—Bill of Sale—Conflict of Laws.

VI.—Contract.

VOL. XIII.—Infant—Insurance.

(Nearly ready.)

VOL. VII.—Conversion—Counsel.

VIII.—Criminal Law—Deed.

IX.—Defamation—Dramatic and Musical Copyright.

X.—Easement—Estate.

XI.—Estoppel—Execution.

XII.—Executor—Indemnity.

VOL. XIV. Insurance—Judge.

(In the Press.)

Royal 8vo., half vellum, gilt top, price each, net, 25s.

Subscription for Five Volumes, paid in advance, £1 per Volume.

* * Specimen Volume sent on application.

NOW READY. Index to Vols. I. to X.

With ADDENDA from 1894 to 1896 inclusive.

Price, bound in half vellum, net 20s.; to Subscribers to the Work, 10s.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A perfect storehouse of the principles established and illustrated by our case law and that of the United States."—Law Times.

"By this time this series has become so widely known, and doubtless appreciated, that it becomes unnecessary to do much more than chronicle the appearance of the new volume, to state the contents, and to say that its workmanship is quite up to the former level."—Law Journal.

"A work of unusual value and interest. . . . Each leading case or group of cases is preceded by a statement in bold type of the rule which they are quoted as establishing. The work is happy in conception, and this first volume shows that it will be adequately and successfully carried out."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The general scheme appears to be excellent, and its execution reflects the greatest credit on everybody concerned. It may, indeed, be said to constitute, for the present, the high-water mark of the science of book-making."—Saturday Review.

* * SPECIAL OFFER TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS:—

Volumes I. to XV., with Index Volume, £15 : 15s.

STEVENS AND SONS, LIMITED, 119 & 120, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

* * All Standard Law Works are kept in stock, in law calf and other bindings.

